MEANING OF TERMS

USED IN CLASSIFYING ANNOTATING CASES.

THE different expressions used to describe the effect of the annotating cases have the following meanings, and the classification of the annotating cases has been done strictly in accordance with these meanings. The annotating cases, except such as are classified as "Mentioned," are grouped according to the points in the case which they annotate: within these groups they are listed chronologically, except such as are classified as "Referred to," which come at the end of the group and are arranged inter se in chronological order. Cases which annotate the annotated case generally are grouped together after cases which annotate specific points, similarly arranged, and are followed by cases classified as "Mentioned" arranged chronologically inter se. The terms used in classifying the annotating cases are as follows:—

- "APPLIED" (Apld.).—This expression is used to denote the fact that the principle of law enunciated in the annotated case has been applied to a new set of facts and circumstances in the annotating case.
- "APPROVED" (Apprvd.).—This expression is used to denote the fact that the annotated case has been considered to be good law in the annotating case where the latter is in a higher court than the former.
- "CONSIDERED" (Consd.).—This expression is used where the remarks in the annotating case are devoid of adverse criticism and merely denote the giving of more or less careful consideration to the annotated case.
- "DISTINGUISHED" (Distd.).—This expression is used where the earlier case is not necessarily doubted, but where some essential difference (either on the facts or in law) between it and the annotated case is pointed out.
- "DOUBTED" (Dbtd.).—This expression is used where the court in the annotating case without definitely going to the length of saying that the annotated case is wrong, adduces reasons which seem to show that it is not accurate.
- "EXPLAINED" (Expld.).—This expression is used where the earlier case is not necessarily doubted, but the decision arrived at is justified or accounted for by calling attention to some point of fact or of law which is usually, but not necessarily, one not obvious on the face of the report.
- "EXTENDED" (Extd.).—Compare "APPLIED," supra.
- "FOLLOWED" (Folld.).—This expression is used to denote that the same principles of law are applied in the two cases. It does not necessarily imply that the facts are substantially identical in the two cases.
- "NOT FOLLOWED" (N.F.).—Compare "FOLLOWED," supra, to which it is the adverse.
- "OVERRULED" (Overd.).—This expression is used where the annotating case is on substantially identical facts with the annotated case and in a higher court and the rule in the latter case is held to be wrong.
- "REFERRED" (Refd.).—This expression is used only where the annotating case deals with the point of the Digest paragraph and is without comment of any definite character on the case annotated, and where there is no delicate shade of approval or disapproval which would justify the use of any of the foregoing words.
- "MENTIONED" (Mentd.).—This expression is used only where none of the foregoing terms apply. In other words, it is used only where the case annotated is cited on a point having nothing to do with the point in the Digest paragraph.

Part I.—Nature and Characteristics of Easements.

SECT. 1.—DEFINITION.

1. Word known in law.—A man cannot prescribe to have a necessary easement in the lands of another person for himself & his servants to catch fish in his several fishery.

The word "easement" is known in law, but here the thing itself is set forth, viz., to catch fish, etc., & certainly no instance can be given of a prescription for such a liberty by such a word or name (per CUR.).—PEERS v. LAUCY (1694), 4 Mod. Rep. 362; 87 E. R. 444.

2. Privilege without profit.—(1) Declaration stated, that A. was seised in fee of an inn, & yard thereto adjoining, & by indenture demised the same to pltf. for a term of years, which was undetermined; that deft. was possessed of a certain other yard adjoining the premises of pltf. as tenant thereof to B.; & that deft. & his landlord granted to A. his heirs & assigns, authority to make, at the costs of A. a drain from the inn, & across, a certain part of the yard of deft., into the yard of pltf.; & that A. his heirs & assigns, & his farmers & tenants, occupiers of the inn & yard, should have the foul water collected in the scullery of the inn, to run from the same, through the drain, across the part of the yard of deft., into the yard of pltf. for so long time as occasion should require for the convenient occupation of the inn or its appurtenances. Breach, that deft., without notice, obstructed the drain. Another count stated the grant to be for so long time as deft. should be in possession or occupation of the last-mentioned land, or so long as the same should be requisite for the convenient occupation of the inn. It appeared in evidence that the licence to construct & continue the drain was by parol:—Held: as the right claimed in the declaration was a freehold right, assuming that it was an easement only upon the land of another, & not an interest in the land, it could not be created without deed.

(2) Terms de la Ley, a book of great antiquity & accuracy, defines an easement to be a privilege that one neighbour hath of another by charter or prescription, without profit; & it instances "as a way or sink through his land, or such like" (BAYLEY, J.).

(3) A right of way or a right of passage for water, where it does not create an interest in the land, is an incorporeal right, & stands upon the same footing with other incorporeal rights, such as rights of common, rents, advowsons, etc. (BAYLEY, J.).—HEWLINS v. SHIPPAM (1826), 5 B. & C. 221; 7 Dow. & Ry. K. B. 783; 4 J. O. S. K. B. 241; 108 E. R. 82.

3. —(1) One of the earliest definitions of an easement is in the Termes de la Ley, & it is a "privilege that one neighbour hath of another by writing or prescription, without profit, as a way or a sink through his land."

In this definition custom is not mentioned; prescription is, & it therefore seems to point to a privilege belonging to an individual, not a custom which appertains to many as a class (MARTIN, B.).

(2) To constitute an easement there must be two tenements, a dominant one to which the right belongs, & a servient one upon which the obligation is imposed (MARTIN, B.).—MOUNSEY v. ISMAY (1865), 3 H. & C. 486; 34 L. J. Ex. 52; 12 L. T. 26; 11 Jur. N. S. 141; 13 W. R. 521; 159 E. R. 621.

Annotations:—As to (2) Reid. Shuttleworth v. Le Fleming (1865), 19 C. B. N. S. 687; Met. Ry. v. Fowler, [1892] 1 Q. B. 165; Mercer v. Denno, [1905] 2 Ch. 538. Generally, Mentd. Sowerby v. Coleman (1867), L. R. 2 Exch. 96; Hall v. Nottingham (1875), 45 L. J. Q. B. 50.

4. Burden on proprietary right.—(1) A right to lateral support from adjoining land may be acquired by twenty years uninterrupted enjoyment for a building proved to have been newly built, or altered so as to increase the lateral pressure, at the beginning of that time; & it is so acquired if the enjoyment is peaceable & without deception or concealment & so open that it must be known that some support is being enjoyed by the building. Semble: such a right of support is an easement within the meaning of Prescription Act, 1832 (c. 71), s. 2. Two dwelling houses adjoined, built independently but each on the extremity of its owner's soil & having lateral support from the soil on which the other rested. This having continued for much more than twenty years one of the houses (pltf.'s) was, in 1849, converted into a coach factory, the internal walls being removed & girders inserted into a stack of brickwork in such a way as to throw much more lateral pressure than before upon the soil under the adjoining house. The conversion was made openly, & without deception or concealment. More than twenty years after the conversion the owners of the adjoining house employed a contractor to pull down their house & excavate, the contractor being bound to shore up adjoining buildings & make good all damage. The contractor employed a sub-contractor upon similar terms. The house was pulled down, & the soil under it excavated to a depth of several feet & pltf.'s stack being deprived of the lateral support of the adjacent soil sank & fell, bringing down with it most of the factory:—Held: pltf.'s had acquired a right of support for their factory by the twenty years' enjoyment & could sue the owners of the adjoining house & the contractor for the injury.

(2) In one sense every easement may be regarded as a right of property in the owner of the dominant tenement, not a full or absolute right, but a limited right or interest in land which belongs to another, whose plenum dominium is diminished to the extent to which his estate is affected by the easement. But a right constituted in favour of estate A. & its owners, in or over the adjoining lands of B., is in my opinion of the nature of an easement, & that, whether such right is one of the natural incidents of property, or has its origin in grant or prescription (LORD WATSON).

(3) At the time when the twenty years' rule was first promulgated by the cts., a document under seal was the only specific mode known to the common law in which an incorporeal hereditament could be created. But there are many cases in which equitable rights in the nature of an easement arise without any deed at all. There may be a binding agreement for valuable consideration not under seal. There may be conduct or inaction on the part of an adjoining owner which will in equity preclude him from denying that a right in the nature of an easement has been acquired against himself (BOWEN, J.).

The absence in fact of a grant, meaning thereby, a deed under seal, cannot, in my opinion, be conclusive against pltf. [grantee]. Assent or acquiescence on part of defts. to the erection of pltf.'s building, with a knowledge of its peculiar mode of construction, would, in the absence of any deed under seal, entitle pltf. to maintain this action (LINDLEY, J.).

(4) When [the landowner] severs the ownership & conveys a part of the land to another he gives the person to whom it is conveyed, unless the contrary is expressed, not a right to complain of what has been already done but a right to have the support in future (LORD BLACKBURN).

(5) Forty years user has the same effect which, under Prescription Act, 1832 (c. 71), s. 3, twenty years user has as to light; it makes the right absolute & indefeasible, unless it is shown to have been enjoyed by consent or agreement in writing. But twenty years user, under sect. 2 may be defeated "in any other way by which" it was previously (i.e., before Aug. 1, 1832), "liable to be defeated," except that it can no longer be defeated or destroyed "by showing only that it was first enjoyed at any time prior to such period of twenty years." The effect of this, as I understand it, is to apply the law of prescription, properly so called, to an easement enjoyed as of right for twenty years, subject to all defences to which a claim by prescription would previously have been open, except that of showing a commencement within time of legal memory. To allege that there was no evidence from which a grant could be presumed, or that there was evidence from which it ought to be inferred that there was, in fact, no grant, would not (as I understand the law) have been, before Aug. 1, 1832, a competent mode of defeating or destroying any claim to an easement by prescription, & no jury would have been directed to find a grant in any such case, when there was no proof of a commencement within time of legal memory (LORD SELBORNE, C.).

(6) Prescription Act, 1832 (c. 71), so far as it went, made that a direct bar which was before only a bar by the intervention of a jury & the use of an artificial fiction of law. But it did not abolish the old doctrine; if it had, old rights even from time immemorial would have been put an end to by unity of occupation for the space of a year. I think the law, as far as regards this subject, is the same as it was before that Act was passed (LORD BLACKBURN).

(7) From the view which I take of the nature of the right to support, that it is an easement, not purely negative, capable of being granted, & also capable of being interrupted, it seems to me to follow that it must be within Prescription Act, 1832 (c. 71), s. 2, unless that sect. is confined to rights of way & rights of water (LORD SELBORNE, C.).

(8) The easement of the riparian landowner is natural; that of the mill owner of the stream so far as it exceeds that of an ordinary riparian proprietor is conventional, i.e. it must be established by prescription or grant (LORD SELBORNE, C.).

(9) In the natural state of land, one part of it receives support from another, upper from lower strata, & soil from adjacent soil. This support is natural, & is necessary, as long as the status quo of the land is maintained; & therefore, if one parcel of land be conveyed, so as to be divided in point of title from another contiguous to it, or (as in the case of mines) below it, the status quo of support passes with the property in the land, not as an easement held by a distinct title, but as an incident to the land itself, sine quo res ipsa haberi non debet. All existing divisions of property in land must have been attended with this incident, when not excluded by contract; & it is for that reason often spoken of as a right by law; a right of the owner to the enjoyment of his own property, as distinguished from an easement supposed to be gained by grant; a right for injury to which an adjoining proprietor is responsible, upon the principle, sic utere tuo, ut alienum non laedas (LORD SELBORNE, C.).

(10) I think it clear that any such right of support to a building, or part of a building, is an easement; & it is both scientifically & practically inaccurate to describe it as one of a merely negative kind (LORD SELBORNE, C.).

(11) Though the right of support to a building is not of common right & must be acquired yet when it is acquired the right of the owner of the building to support for it is precisely the same as that of the owner of the land to support for it (LORD BLACKBURN).

(12) Support to that which is artificially imposed upon land cannot exist ex jure naturæ, because the thing supported does not itself so exist; it must in each particular case be acquired by grant, or by some means equivalent in law to grant, in order to make it a burden upon the neighbour's land, which (naturally) would be free from it (LORD SELBORNE, C.).

(13) If a building is divided into floors or "flats," separately owned, the owner of each upper floor or "flat" is entitled to vertical support from the lower part of the building & to the benefit of such lateral support as may be of right enjoyed by the building itself (LORD SELBORNE, C.).—DALTON v. 5. —.]—A special Act authorised the M. railway co. to construct an underground railway, & provided that with respect to lands under a highway the co. should not be required wholly to take such lands, but might appropriate & use the subsoil & under-surface. Under this Act the co. constructed a tunnel under a highway for the purposes of the railway:—Held: upon the true construction of their special Act the co., had with respect to the tunnel an interest in land & not merely an easement; the tunnel was a "hereditament" within the meaning of Land Tax Act, 1797 (c. 5), s. 4, & the co., was in respect thereof chargeable with the land tax imposed by that Act.

I think it right to notice that, in one of the clauses of their special Act of 1879, the interest of the co. in strata under-lying a highway is referred to as an easement, which is a mere burden upon the proprietary right of the owner in fee. It may consist either in restraining, for the benefit of the dominant tenement, certain uses which its owner might otherwise make of the servient land, or in compelling him to submit to uses of that land by others, which are not incompatible with his retaining the right of property. In this case, so long as the tunnel is used for railway purposes, the interest of the owner from whom it was appropriated appears to me to be entirely ousted. I am of opinion that, in the present question, regard must be had to the substance & true legal character of the interest conferred upon the co. by statute, & not to general terms, occurring in the statute, & not inaccurately describe it (LORD WATSON).—*METROPOLITAN RY. PART I. SECT. 2, SUB-SECT. 1.

6 i. Interest in land.—A deed granting all the right, title, interest, etc., of A. in & to the water privilege of a piece of land, conveys only an easement in the land, & no interest in the land itself; therefore the grantee cannot by virtue of the deed maintain trespass for an entry on the land.—WILSON v. SINCLAIR (1856), 3 All. 343.—CAN.

6 ii. —.]—A deed, after granting certain land, describing it by metes & bounds, continued, "also a road forty

SUB-SECT. 1.—IN GENERAL.

6. Interest in land.—GODLEY v. FRITH (1609), Yelv. 159; 80 E. R. 106.

7. —.]—An action for obstructing a right of way is not an action concerning the freehold or inheritance, or title of land, & therefore, is prevented being removed out of an inferior ct. by 21 Jac. 1, c. 23. On removing such an action, a recognisance must be entered into, under Inferior Courts Act, 1778 (c. 70), though the action is for damages only. A recognisance in the alternative, to pay the debt & costs, or render debt, to prison, is bad.—FRANKS v. QUINSE (1839), 2 Will. Woll. & H. 58; 3 Jur. 1104.

8. —.]—(1) The right of support is not an easement but one of the ordinary rights of property.

Comrs., under an enclosure Act, made an award in 1770 allotting a certain portion of surface land to P., & the minerals underneath the same land to H. The award executed by P., & other landowners, but not by H., contained a covenant by the several proprietors, parties thereto, stating "that the mines so allotted may for ever after be held & enjoyed by the persons to whom the same are assigned, according to the true intent of this award, & be worked accordingly without interruption of any other persons parties thereto, & those claiming under them respectively, who for the time being may be owners of the surface under which such mines are situate, & without being subject or liable to any action for damage on account of working the same, by reason that the surface may be rendered uneven & less commodious to the occupiers thereof by sinking in hollows or being otherwise injured; the proprietors having agreed with each other to accept their respective allotments, subject to any inconvenience or incumbrance which may arise from the cause aforesaid." Ever since the date of the award the surface had been occupied by P. & his assignees, whose interests had vested in pltf., & the mines by H. & his assignees, who were now represented by deft. Houses were built upon the land of P. after the award. After they had been standing more than twenty years, the surface land & houses were injured by the subsidence of the soil, caused by the working by deft. of the underlying minerals. The working had been carried on without any negligence on the part of deft., & according to the custom of mining in the neighbourhood:—Held: pltf. had acquired the title to the surface soil with only a qualified right of support, & subject to the covenant, & could not, therefore, maintain an action against deft. for the damage caused to the surface by the working of the mines in the usual & proper way.

(2) An easement must be an interest in or over the soil; but the owner of the mines might have removed every atom of the minerals without being liable to an action if the soil above had not fallen. So, if the superincumbent strata rested on the minerals, he might have abstracted them, & substituted stone, or brick or any other substance, & would not have incurred any liability if the surface had not sunk. In such case the consequential feet wide," adding to the description thereof "& not included in the above quantity of land".—Held: the fee in the freehold therein did not pass to the grantee but merely an easement of the right of way over the land.—FISHER v. WEBSTER (1895), 27 O. R. 35.—CAN.

damage is the cause of action; & Stat. Limitations would run only from the time when the injury was sustained, & not from the time when the act was done. The award then cannot be treated as a grant of the surface with a qualified easement of support from the mines below (CRESSWELL, J.).

(3) I am of opinion that it is competent to the owner of land, on or after the severance of the mines, to grant to the grantee of the mines the right to damage the surface. I cannot see how, if there may not be a grant of mines, & of the right to enter, sink shafts, & work, there may be such a grant as that contended for here. Nor can I see how, if a grant of the right of unobstructed light & air, or of support of the soil, to an adjoining owner, would be good, a grant of such a right as claimed here would not be. My brother HAYES said presumed grants of windows & of support were idle fictions, which ought never to have been invented: perhaps so; but the fact that they were shows that the inventors & everybody else supposed that real grants of such a nature would be good. But another objection is taken. It is said that all easements suppose a right exercised over the servient tenement; even in the case of lights it is the passage of the rays of light & of air; & in the support of the neighbouring soil it is its continuance in its place; & that the claim of deff. here is not to do something on plffs.' land, but merely not to be sued for what he does on his own. It is no answer to this objection to say that it is exceedingly subtle. It certainly would be strange if such a right could not be given with a grant of an estate in the mines, but could, to a licence; & yet to the latter the objection would not apply. And I think the true answer to it (assuming deff. claims an easement) is, that the rules which are applicable to owners adjoining vertically, which is the natural order, are not applicable where there is an unusual order of things, viz. a division of horizontal ownership (BRAMWELL, B.).—*ROWBOTHAM v. 12. —.]—(1) A railway co. gave notice of their intention to widen their railway, by making an arch over the land of P. & C., which was used as a manufactory. P. & C. gave the co. notice to take all their manufactory. The co. then gave the usual notices to the sheriffs to summon a jury to assess the value of the property—property in the nature of an easement comprised in the original notice, taking no heed of the counter-notice. On a bill filed by P. & C., the co. were restrained from proceeding before the jury until they had agreed to purchase the whole of the manufactory, plffs. undertaking to sell the same, & to make a good title. The co. then served another notice on P. & C., withdrawing the original notice, & giving notice of intention to summon a jury to assess the value of the whole manufactory. P. & C. filed a second bill against the co. to restrain them from proceeding pursuant to these notices; the co. offering to submit to any mode of valuation, either of the easement or of the whole manufactory which the ct. might direct, the injunction was refused, as such an injunction would restrain the co. from taking that which P. & C. had undertaken to sell, & upon which undertaking the original injunction had been granted.

(2) A right of way is not an hereditament within the meaning of Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845 (c. 18).

(3) A right of way may be considered as a right upon, in, & connected with a particular property, but no right of way, or any number of rights of way, can form a part of that particular property.

(4) A notice to take an easement is not warranted by above Act.

(5) Where a notice & counternotice are given under sect. 62 of above Act, the two notices are to be considered, with a view to the exercise of the compulsory powers of the Act, as one amalgamated notice.—*PINCHIN v. 14. Incorporeal hereditament.—By a special Act the S. co. were authorised to make a railway & to carry it across the railway of the G. co. at one point by a bridge over & at another by an archway under that railway, the archway to remain the property of the G. co. The Act, by sect. 8, which was inserted at the instance of the G. co. for their protection provided that the S. co. should not purchase & take any land of the G. co. which the S. co. were authorised to use, enter upon or interfere with, but that the S. co. might purchase & take, & the G. co. should sell & grant accordingly an easement or right of using the same in perpetuity for the purposes of the Act; & by sect. 9, that if any dispute should arise respecting the matters aforesaid it should be settled by an arbitrator to be appointed under the Act. Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845 (c. 18), except where expressly varied by the special Act, was incorporated therewith & it was enacted that the words & expressions to which meanings were assigned by the above Act should have the same respective meanings unless there was something in the subject or context repugnant to such construction. The S. co. gave the G. co. a notice to treat for the purchase of an easement or right in or over lands of the G. co. for the purposes of the crossing, & shortly afterwards a notice of their desire to enter upon & use the lands for those purposes, & of their intention to apply to the Board of Trade to appoint a surveyor to determine the value of such easement or right. The valuation was made, & the S. co. deposited the amount & entered into a bond under sect. 85 of the 1845 Act. The G. co., having brought an action for an injunction to restrain the S. co. from entering or continuing upon the lands mentioned in the notice to treat, or from putting in force any of the powers of the special Act or of the 1845 Act in relation to the compulsory purchase of land, on the ground that the capital of the S. co. had not been duly subscribed as required by sect. 16 of the 1845 Act:—Held: (1) the S. co. could not be restrained on that ground; (2) the assertion of the rights conferred by sect. 8 of the special Act was not a "putting in force of the powers of the 1845 Act or of the special Act in relation to the compulsory taking of land"; even if the perpetual easements created by sect. 8 of the special Act would constitute "land" within sect. 16 of the 1845 Act yet the case had been taken out of the compulsory powers of that Act by sect. 8 of the special Act.

We have, therefore, before us not the case of any known easement, or of any hereditament of any tenure known to the law, but a right the result of a Parliamentary arrangement of a peculiar & special nature (LORD FITZGERALD).

It is clear to me that it is what the Statute calls it, an easement, or rather easements, & nothing more. . . . The respondents' estate or interest then is (if an hereditament at all) incorporeal. . . . I am of opinion then that "hereditaments" includes "incorporeal hereditaments" (LORD BRAMWELL).—GREAT WESTERN RY. CO. v. SWINDON & CHELTENHAM RY. CO. (1884), 9 App. Cas. 787; 53 L. J. 15. —[By an agreement under seal dated 1854, & made between H., the owner in fee of land, & a railway co., while a bill, which subsequently became an Act, was before Parliament to enable the co. to construct certain railways intended to pass to a great extent over H.'s land, it was agreed that H. should, immediately after the passing of the bill, grant to the co., by lease in the form set out verbatim in the agreement, a "way-leave" over his land, with the right to make & use the railways thereon. The form of lease so embodied in the agreement purported to grant to the co. a way-leave & right to make & use the railways, or such parts thereof as were to pass over H.'s land, for the term of 1,000 years, the co. paying to H. a specified rent on coal carried over any part of the railways comprehended in the special Act, to Port B. The form of lease gave H. powers of distress & entry for non-payment of rent, & contained a covenant by the co., with H., to pay the rent to him. No formal lease was ever executed, but the co. entered on H.'s land & constructed the railways. One of them, the M. branch, partly crossed H.'s land, & coal was carried over it to B. For upwards of forty years from the date of the agreement rent was paid by the co. for coal carried over this branch so far only as it crossed H.'s land, the parties acting throughout on the assumption that under the agreement no rent was payable for coal not carried over H.'s land. In an action brought by H.'s successor in title to the land against the co., claiming that, according to the true construction of the agreement, rent was payable for coal passing over any part of the M. branch to B., whether it crossed his land or not:—Held: (1) the agreement with the embodied form of lease was not an executory instrument, but must be construed as an agreement, complete in all its terms, for a lease of a way-leave for 1,000 years over H.'s land; (2) the agreement could not be regarded as an ancient document capable of being construed by the light of contemporaneous usage, but must be construed according to its literal meaning, namely, that rent was payable for coal carried over any part of the M. branch to B., whether it crossed H.'s land or not; (3) the way-leave granted was an incorporeal hereditament annexed to the land in the hands of H. or his successors in title; (4) the rent, whether for coal carried over H.'s land or not, must be regarded as payable in respect of the land leased, & was consequently payable to pltf. as the owner of the reversion within 32 Hen. 8, c. 34, s. 1, & not to H.'s legal personal representative, there being sufficient privity of estate between the owners of the land over which the

On Nov. 10, 1846, J. demised to deft. the same premises for the term of 23 years, reserving a rent, & afterwards assigned his interest to pltf. Pltf. sued to recover arrears of rent. By the deed entered into by deft. & J. licence & liberty was given to deft. to use, during the continuance of the demise, a certain railway, jointly with J. Pltf. had after the assignment to him, & before the rent for which the action was brought became due, prevented deft. from using the railway:—Held: this constituted no answer to the action, as the rent issued out of the thing demised, & not out of the easement to use the railway.—WILLIAMS v. Under above Acts a limited owner conveyed land & an absolute owner granted easements to the corpn. In both cases a perpetual yearly rent was reserved:—Held: the Liverpool Act, ss. 2 & 3, extended the provisions of Lands Clauses Act, ss. 10 & 11, & gave to a limited owner the same power of selling for a rentcharge as an absolute owner, & also enabled an easement to be purchased for a rentcharge, so that the rents reserved were charged upon the rates.

SUB-SECT. 2.—MUST BE APPURTENANT TO LAND—NO EASEMENTS IN GROSS.

20. General rule.]—In an action of trespass defts. justified under a right of way supposed to have been conveyed to them by S. The deed was set out by pltf. & the description of the parcels conveyed contained the following words: "Together with all ways, etc., particularly the right & privilege to & for the owners & occupiers of, etc. (the premises conveyed) & all persons having occasion to resort thereto, of passing & repassing for all purposes in, over, along, & through a certain road," etc. (describing the locus in quo). Defts. in their plea, after stating the conveyance to S. in the terms of the deed, & deducing their title from S. under a conveyance to them of the same "lands, tenements, hereditaments, premises, & appurtenances," as those conveyed to him by the above-mentioned deed, alleged that they being owners & occupiers of the premises, & having occasion for their own purposes to use the right & privilege granted by the conveyance to S. did on foot, etc., pass & repass (for the purposes of them, defts., along the road, etc. (the locus in quo)):—Held: (1) the right granted by the conveyance to S. was not restricted to a user of the road for purposes connected with the enjoyment of the land conveyed to him by the same deed; (2) the conveyance to defts. of the land conveyed to S. & its appurtenances, could not give defts. as owners & occupiers of that land, a right of road over other land for purposes unconnected with the enjoyment of the land of which they were owners & occupiers, & therefore did not pass to them the rights which S. had over the locus in quo.

22. Whether appurtenant to incorporeal hereditament.]—A several fishery may exist either apart from or as incident to the ownership of the soil over which the river flows; but where a several fishery is proved to exist, the owner of the fishery is to be presumed, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, to be the owner of the soil, whether it is a navigable river or a river neither public nor navigable. The use of the word "several" or "separalis piscaria" is not necessary to create a several fishery. The grant of "weirs" is a grant not of a mere right of fishing, but of a corporeal hereditament consisting not only of the soil on which any particular weir is constructed, but of the soil over which the river runs, & upon which there is the right to construct weirs for the purpose of taking fish. A grant purporting to give a definite length of several fishery may still be a good grant of a several fishery in part of the river so included though as to other part of it the Crown, at the time, had no several fishery to give.

Semble: an incorporeal right of way along both banks of a river may be appendant to an incorporeal right of fishing, the one being capable of union with the other without any incongruity.—HANBURY v. JENKINS, [1901] 2 Ch. 401; 70 L. J. Ch. 730; 65 J. P. 631; 40 W. R. 615; 17 T. L. R. 530.

24. Necessity for dominant & servient tenements.]—MOUNSEY v. ISMAX, No. 3, ante.

25. Distinguished from running powers over railway.]—The entry by a railway co. on land for the purpose of diverting over it a public way which ran over lands already in the occupation of the co., is an entry with a view to the permanent user of the land within Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845 (c. 18), s. 84; & no entry for such purpose is lawful, except on payment of the proper purchase-money.

It appears clear that to create an easement over land you must possess the ownership of the land. Every easement has its origin in a grant express or implied. The person who can make that grant must be the owner of the land. But I must also observe that it appears to me to be an incorrect expression to speak of this as an easement. There can be no easement properly so called unless there be both a servient & a dominant tenement. There is in this case no dominant tenement whatever. There can be no such thing according to our law, or according to the civil law, as what I may term an easement in gross (LORD CAIRNS, L.J.).—RANGELEY v. MIDLAND RY. CO. (1868), 3 Ch. 26. —.]—An action for trespass to land to which pltf. has an undisputed possessory title is not an action in which the title to any corporeal hereditament is in question, & is therefore triable in a county ct.

A public right of navigation is not an easement within County Courts Act, 1888 (c. 43), s. 60, so as to oust the jurisdiction of the county ct. where such a right is in question.

Def. claims only an easement to do what he has done. No doubt the term "easement" has, somewhat loosely & inaccurately perhaps, but still with sufficient accuracy for some purposes, been said to define the case of a public right of way, in which case there exists no dominant & servient tenement; but in strictness & according to the proper use of legal language, the term "easement" does imply a dominant tenement in respect of which the easement is claimed, & a servient tenement upon which the right claimed is exercised (LORD COLERIDGE, C.J.).—*HAWKINS v. B. Benefit of Dominant Tenement.

28. Servient owner acquires no right to continuance.]—Before 1800, a canal co., under powers of an Act of Parliament, diverted for the purposes of the canal a considerable part of the water from a brook which flowed through pltf.'s land, at a point above pltf.'s land, the rest of the water continuing to flow in its natural channel. In 1847 an Act was passed authorising defts., a railway co., to purchase the canal, to discontinue the use of it, & to fill it up, & sell such parts as were not used for the railway. Under these powers the use of the canal was discontinued in 1853; & in 1864 defts. made a cut by which they restored to the brook at a point above pltf.'s land the water which had been diverted from it. In 1865 defts. conveyed the part of the canal on which they had made the cut to a purchaser in fee. The bed of the stream, owing to the diminished scour of the water from 1800 to 1853, had been silted up, so as to be insufficient to carry off the water coming down in extraordinary floods. In 1866 such a flood occurred; the water overflowed pltf.'s land & damaged his crops:—Held: there being no obligation imposed upon the canal co. to continue the diversion, pltf. had no right of action.

An easement exists for the benefit of the dominant owner alone, & the servient owner acquires no right to insist on its continuance, or to ask for damages on its abandonment (COCKBURN, C.J.).

The right of diverting water which in its natural course would flow over or along the land of a riparian owner & of conveying it to the land of the party diverting it, the servituo aquae ducendae of the civilians, is an easement well known to the law of this as of every other country. Ordinarily such an easement can be created, according to the law of England only by grant or by long combined enjoyment from which the existence of a former grant may be reasonably presumed. But such a right may, like any other rights, be created in derogation of a prior right by the action of the legislation (COCKBURN, C.J.).—MASON v. SHREWSBURY & HEREFORD RY. CO. (1871), *L. that several houses had been built from time to time, & that the owner had carried the materials over this road, & the occupiers of the new houses had used the road, we might infer that the right of way was not to be confined to those particular houses, because that was not the original grant, but that the parties contemplated building generally at the time of the original grant, & intended to include in it a right of way to all future houses. I will not say that there is no evidence here of such a right, but there is not sufficient evidence for us to act upon, or to lead us to say that there is a right beyond what is necessary & reasonable for the occupation of the premises as a farm (MELLISH, L.J.).

46. ———.]—By a deed of July 12, 1871, the trustees of a highway, in exercise of rights & powers given to them under Acts of Geo. 3 & Geo. 4, & for valuable consideration, granted a licence to the predecessor in title of deft. co. to construct & use a tunnel under the highway. The rights & powers of the trustees came to an end on Nov. 1,

ing houses, had a privy in one, the water from which flowed into the land of B. & as to this there existed an easement in favour of A. But A. built a new privy in the second house & connected the drains of the two so that the amount of water discharged over B.'s land was largely increased. B. then blocked up the channel through which the water came on to his land. On suit by A. to have this obstruction removed:—Held: Indian Easements Act, 1882, s. 43, did not apply & the dominant owner did not lose his easement altogether through the action which he had taken, but the status quo ante both could & should be restored.—*LAMESHWEN, ETC. v. 1871, when 33 & 34 Vict. c. 73 was passed. The tunnel in question was completed in 1872, & remained without any substantial alteration, in the exclusive possession & occupation of deft. co., or their predecessors in title, until the commencement of the action in Aug. 1891. The tunnel was many feet beneath the surface; it was bricked at either end, & was used to carry chalk & soil from one part of deft.'s property to another. Pltf. was owner of the land abutting on the highway on one side, & at one place, on both sides; & he alleged that he was owner of the soil under the highway. By his action he claimed an injunction to restrain the trespass upon his land:—Held: even assuming that pltf. had a sufficient title to the soil under the highway, apart from Stat. Limitations, the action was barred by that statute, inasmuch as deft. co. had enjoyed no mere easement, but the exclusive occupation & possession of the tunnel for more than the required twelve years.—*BEVAN v. The local board laid gas mains & kept them in repair, & afforded the corpn. the use thereof for the supply of gas in B., the mains being used for no other purpose than the supply of gas by the corpn.:—Held: the corpn. were not the occupiers of the gas mains, but had merely an easement, & were not liable to be rated.—*SOUTHPORT CORPN. v. The test of ratability is not whether the rights granted are corporeal or incorporeal, but whether there is occupation, which is a question of fact. Pursuant to statute, a landowner granted to a drainage co., the exclusive right to drain through a tunnel & a watercourse on his land, with a right to place works in the tunnel & watercourse, & of making other tunnels in connection with it, but reserving to himself mineral & other rights:—Held: the statute & grant gave the co. not merely an easement but possession of the tunnels & watercourse; the rights reserved by the owner were subordinate to the rights granted to the co., & the co. were de facto in occupation of tunnels & watercourse, & ratable in respect thereof.—*HOLYWELL UNION & HALKYN PARISH v. SUB-SECT. 4.—OWNER OR OCCUPIER OF TENEMENT CANNOT HAVE EASEMENT OVER IT.

49. General rule.—(1) No way, or other easement can subsist in land of which there is an unity of possession. But if a lessor, having used convenient ways over his own adjoining land during his own occupation, demises premises with all ways appurtenant, unless it be shown in evidence that there was some way appurtenant in alieno solo, to satisfy the words of the grant, it shall be intended that he meant the ways used, & they shall pass, though he miscall them appurtenant.

(2) An action on the covenant for quiet enjoyment may be maintained for the disturbance of a way of necessity.

(3) A lease demised a messuage, consisting of two parts, separated by intervening reserved land, subjected only to a specific right of way for the lessee to a third building for a specific purpose, which reservation, strictly interpreted, would preclude him from all access to the one part, which was accessible only by crossing the reserved land, in one of two directions, the one by entering it from the residue of the demised premises; the other, & far the more convenient, by entering it from a public street:—Held: the lessee was entitled to a way across the reserved land from the public street to that part.

(4) It would not be a great stretch to call that a necessary way without which the most convenient & reasonable mode of enjoying the premises could not be had (MANSFIELD, C.J.).—MORRIS v. EDGINGTON (1810), 3 Taunt. 24; 128 E. R. 10.

fit & of making the use of one parcel subservient to that of the other, if he chooses so to do; & if the title to different parcels comes to be vested in the same owner, there is an extinguishment of any easements which may previously have existed, a species of merger by which what may have been, whilst the different parcels were easements, etc., to the several messuages, etc., belonging or appertaining, or therewith usually held, used, occupied, or enjoyed: to have & to hold the messuages, etc., called A., with the buildings, lands, etc., thereunto belonging, & their appurtenances, to the releasee to the use of S. in fee; habendum, as to estate B., in similar terms with respect to the parcels, to the releasee to his own use in fee, in order that he might become tenant to the præcipe in a recovery:—Held: the deed sufficiently showed an intention that a right of way, which way was admitted to have been used up to the time of the deed, from the high road over B. to A. & back, for the convenient use of A., by the occupiers of A., should pass to the uses limited as to A. By the word "appurtenances," in the habendum as to A., interpreting that clause with reference to the other parts of the deed, the way in question did pass. The releasee to uses, having no estate in A., had not such a seisin of the soil as would extinguish the right of way by unity of seisin.

Plea, as to the depositing, etc., that deft. had been the occupier of the mill on the river H. for more than twenty years before, etc., & that being such occupier deft. enjoyed as of right & without interruption the privilege & easement of depositing upon the bed & channel of the H., & the banks & sides & near to his mill, all such quantities of cinders, etc., as were produced in the mill:—Held: (1) supposing deft. to claim the banks & bed of the H., on & in which the cinders, etc., had been deposited, as in his own occupation, or that the banks & bed were in the occupation of some third person, as against whom a valid right by way of easement had been gained, in either view the plea failed to show any right of easement as against pltf.; (2) even if it were taken that an easement in the bed & banks of the H. had been alleged & proved, & as a natural consequence that the deposit on the bed of the C. was necessarily established, still, as it was consistent with the plea that no perceptible deposit had been occasioned on pltf.'s part of the bed of the C. for twenty years, the plea was insufficient to show a claim to an easement of depositing cinders, etc., on pltf.'s part of the bed of the C. Qu.: whether, if such a claim had been alleged, it could be considered as a valid claim to an easement, within Prescription Act, 1832 (c. 71), s. 2.

53. —.]—(1) In 1872 the owner of two adjoining pieces of land granted one to pltf. & the other to deft. The grant to pltf. contained the general words, "together with all ways, etc., easements, & appurtenances whatsoever to the tenement, & premises hereby granted, or any part thereof, now or heretofore held or enjoyed, or reputed or known as part or parcel thereof, or appurtenant thereto." Prior to 1852 the occupiers of the two tenements had used in common a formed private road, for the purpose of going to & from their respective tenements to the high road. There was access to pltf.'s tenement from the high road without passing over the private road, but the only access to deft.'s tenement was by means of that road. In 1852, by the permission of the owner, the then occupier of pltf.'s tenement built a wall which entirely separated his tenement from the private road, & from that time down to 1872, & afterwards, with one exception, down to the issue of the writ, the occupiers of pltf.'s tenement made no use of the private road, but obtained access to the tenement directly from the high road:—Held: under the circumstances the inference that the word "heretofore" in the grant to pltf. was used in its ordinary grammatical meaning was rebutted, & no right to the use of the private road passed to him.

(2) Of course, strictly speaking, the owner of two tenements can have no easement over one of them in respect of the other (FRY, L.J.).—ROE v. SIDONS (1888), 22 Q. B. D. 224; 60 L. T. 345; 53 J. P. 246; 37 W. R. 228, C. A.

55. —[—] (1) The owner of land in which water flows through an artificial channel has no right to appropriate all such water. Nor is he entitled to diminish the flow of water down the stream by abstracting water from the springs which feed that stream.

(2) The conveyance to pltf.'s predecessor expressly included all easements & watercourses "appertaining to the land conveyed," but the words "or usually enjoyed therewith or reputed as part thereof or appurtenant thereto" were not inserted. The watercourse in question was not an easement in any proper sense, whilst the lands in which the stream originated, & through which it flowed, belonged to one & the same owner. But it is, in my opinion, clear that after the conveyance to pltf.'s predecessor the vendor could not have cut off the stream & have deprived the purchaser of the benefit of its flow (LINDLEY, L.J.).

(3) Before 1879 these properties belonged to the same person. In that year they were sold by auction in separate lots on the same day, & pltf.'s predecessor bought the land east of the railway, deft.'s predecessor buying the land west of the railway in which the spring or stream commences. The plan in the particulars of sale does not show the spring or stream, neither is it marked upon the plan on the conveyance to pltf.'s predecessor. It is not mentioned in that conveyance, which contains only the general word "watercourse" which could apply to it. But, although the law is now understood to be, that upon a grant easements cannot be reserved over the land granted by implication without express words, it is otherwise as to implied grants of such easements as are continuous & apparent. The grantor cannot derogate from his grant, & a continuous & apparent easement passes by implication without express words. The law is the same where the servient & dominant tenements are sold at the same time & the quasi easement only becomes an easement in fact by the severance of ownership. On this ground, even if deft. could otherwise have destroyed the spring or stream, I should be of opinion that the law would not permit him to do so. When the unity of ownership was severed, this watercourse & spring then existing in the condition I have described, it would be both apparent & continuous, & deft. could no more interfere with it than the grantor could have done if he had retained deft.'s land (KAY, L.J.).—BUNTING v. 56. —[—] Where works on the foreshore, intended to protect the adjacent lands from the invasion of the sea, have been carried out by the occupier without the knowledge & assent of the Crown, the foreshore right originally attaching to such land before the reclamation are not thereby destroyed. There may be an easement to store goods on the land of another person, but there can be no easement over a tenement which the owner of the dominant tenement claims as his own.

A transfer of the dominion of lands cannot be affected by possession for a period short of the full requisite period of prescription without the presumption of a lost grant.

The law (of easements) must adapt itself to the conditions of modern society & trade, & there is nothing in the purposes for which the easement is claimed (storage) inconsistent in principle with a right of easement as such (per cur.).—A.-G. SECT. 3.—CLASSIFICATION.

57. Affirmative & negative.—User which is neither physically capable of prevention by the owner of the servient tenement, nor actionable, cannot support an easement. This is applicable both to affirmative & negative easements. On this principle the right to make a noise so as to annoy a neighbour cannot be supported by user unless during the period of user the noise has amounted to an actionable nuisance. In considering whether any act is a nuisance, regard must be had not only to the thing done, but to the surrounding circumstances. What would be a nuisance in one locality might not be so in another.

A confectioner had for more than twenty years used a pestle & mortar in his back premises, which abutted on the garden of a physician, & the noise & vibration were not felt as a nuisance & were not complained of. But in 1873 the physician erected a consulting-room at the end of his garden, & then the noise & vibration became a nuisance to him. He accordingly brought an action for an injunction:—Held: deft. had not acquired a right to an easement of making a noise & vibration, & the injunction was granted.

(Consent or acquiescence of the owner of the servient tenement lies at the root of prescription, & of the fiction of a lost grant, & hence the acts or user, which go to the proof of either the one or the other, must be, in the language of the civil law, nec vi, nec clam, nec precario; for a man cannot, as a general rule, be said to consent to or acquiesce in the acquisition by his neighbour of an easement through an enjoyment of which he has no knowledge, actual or constructive, or which he contests & endeavours to interrupt, or which he temporarily licenses. It is a mere extension of the same notion, or rather it is a principle into which by strict analysis it may be resolved, to hold, that an enjoyment which a man cannot prevent raises no presumption of consent or acquiescence. It is a principle which must be equally appropriate to the case of affirmative as of negative easements; in other words, it is equally unreasonable to imply your consent to your neighbour enjoying something which passes from your tenement to his, as to his subjecting your tenement to something which comes from his, when in both cases you have no power of prevention. But the affirmative easement differs from the negative easement in this, that the latter can under no circumstances be interrupted except by acts done upon the servient tenement, but the former, constituting, as it does, a direct interference with the enjoyment by the servient owner of his tenement, may be the subject of legal proceedings as well as of physical interruption (THESSIGER, L.J.).—*STURGES v. 58. —.]—A contract for the sale of land provided that the title should commence with a conveyance dated Aug. 11, 1890. A deed dated 1872 created restrictive covenants over a large part of the land purchased. The vendor had bought in 1901 from a person who had himself purchased from a person, who had acquired a possessory title in 1890. On both sales the title required went back only to 1878. The vendor had no actual notice of the restrictive covenants, nor did they appear on the abstract. The purchaser, having received notice of the restrictive covenants, objected to complete:—Held: the restrictive covenants were in the nature of negative easements binding the land in equity, & were paramount to the title of the dispossessed owner; as the vendor & the person from whom he purchased had not insisted on a forty years' title, they had constructive notice of what they would have ascertained if they had insisted on the same; consequently, no title was shown.

The person who stands simply with the benefit of a negative easement is certainly not put upon the assertion of his right unless & until that right has been interfered with in some way; & it is a matter of absolute indifference to him what person is the owner of the land over which that right exists until that land is used in some manner incompatible with the assertion of that right on the part of the person entitled to it (COLLINS, M.R.).—Re NISBIT & POTTS' CONTRACT, [1906] 1 Ch. 386; 75 L. (2) There is no distinction between easements such as a right of way or easements used from time to time & easements of necessity or continuous easements. The cases recognise this distinction & it is clear law that upon a severance easements used as of necessity, or in their nature continuous, will pass by law without any words of grant, but with regard to easements which are used from time to time only they do not pass unless the owner, by appropriate language, shows an intention that they should pass (ERLE, C.J.).—*POLDEN v. 68. — —.]—(1) An easement of necessity is one without which the property retained upon a severance cannot be used at all; not one which is merely necessary to the reasonable enjoyment of that property.

In 1860 a dock & a wharf to the west of it, & divided from it by a fence, belonged to the same owner. In order to secure the side of the dock, he in that year carried a number of tie-rods under the ground beneath the fence & beneath the surface of the wharf for a distance of about fifteen & a half feet to the west of the fence, the rods being there fastened by nuts to piles which were driven into the soil of the wharf. The tie-rods were not visible; but two nuts on piles were visible on the western side of the camp-sheathing which held up the side of the wharf. In 1877 the then owners of both properties conveyed the wharf to pltfs., without any express reservation of a right of support for the dock. In 1886 the same owners conveyed the dock to defts.' predecessors in title. In 1900 pltfs. in making some excavations in the wharf, became for the first time aware of the existence of the tie-rods:—Held: (2) when the wharf was conveyed to pltfs. there was no implied reservation of a right of support to the dock, & the tie-rods did not remain vested in the grantors as part of or appurtenant to the dock; (3) the owners of the dock had not acquired an easement of support by length of enjoyment, the enjoyment having been clam, & pltfs. were entitled to remove the tie-rods from their land; (4) the easement of support was not one of necessity, & therefore a reservation of it could not be implied.

A prescriptive right to an easement over a man's land should be acquired only when the enjoyment has been open, that is, of such a character that an ordinary owner of the land, diligent in the protection of his interests, would have, or must be taken to have, a reasonable opportunity of becoming aware of the enjoyment (ROMER, L.J.).—UNION LIGHTERAGE CO. v. 69. —[Deft., being the owner of two adjoining tenements, granted one of them to pltf.'s predecessor in title, while retaining the other, without expressly reserving to himself any rights over the tenement granted. Pltf. built a wall on her premises so as to block out the light to two windows in deft.'s premises. One of these windows lighted a pantry which could not be lighted in any other way except by means of borrowed light, & the obstruction rendered the pantry useless as a pantry:—Held: there was no implied reservation to deft. of the right to the access of light to the pantry window, inasmuch as it was not an easement of necessity.

If a vendor of land desires to reserve any right in the nature of an easement for the benefit of his adjacent land which he is not parting with he must do it by express words in the deed of conveyance. . . . That is the general rule, but the rule is subject to certain exceptions. One of them is the well-known exception of an easement of necessity, that is to say, where the enjoyment of the alleged right over the adjoining land is necessary to the property which is not conveyed, then the ct. will consider the easement as implicitly reserved, though it has not been reserved by express words (KEKEWICH, J.).—RAY v. 72. —[There may be a lawful & valid custom for the inhabitants of a parish to have a churchway through the demesne of a manor which is within the parish. Primâ facie a custom in reference to a churchway is a parochial custom.

Pltf. was lord of the manor of I. & also of the manor of S., both within the parish of I. Deft. was the occupier of a tenement in the same parish, but in the manor of S. Across the demesne of the manor of I. was a footpath which ran in front of pltf.'s mansion house to the parish church, & deft. claimed the right to use it as an inhabitant of the parish for the purpose of going to & from the church. In an action of trespass against deft., pltf. alleged that the path was not a churchway for the parishioners generally, but only by virtue of a manorial custom of the manor of I. for a certain class of the tenants of that manor, & in support of that contention tendered in evidence a memorandum made by one of his predecessors in title:—Held: (1) on the evidence no such manorial custom existed; (2) if proved, it was doubtful whether it would be good in law; (3) the memorandum was not admissible in evidence on behalf of pltf.; (4) the path was a churchway by custom for the inhabitants of the parish at large.

It is well settled that by custom a local public or class of persons, as the inhabitants of a parish, may be entitled to have some use or quasi-easement of land, as to have a way to a church or market (JOYCE, J.).—BROCKLEBANK v. Certain landowners & owners of iron works, & among

p. Right of way to two dominant tenements.]—The owner of land upon which there was an avenue, having granted a right of way through the avenue to the owner of one tenement, is not on that account prevented from granting a right of way through the same avenue to the owner of another tenement, unless the second servitude who had purchased B. works, with notice of the partnership deed:—Held: the covenant did not run with the land so as to bind assignees at law; & a ct. of equity would not, by holding the conscience of the purchaser to be affected by the notice, give the covenant a more extensive operation than the law allowed to it.

So in respect of enjoyment, one may have the possession & the fee simple, & another may have a rent issuing out of it, or the tithes of its produce, or an easement, as a right of way upon it, or of common over it. Such last incorporeal hereditament may be annexed to an estate which is wholly unconnected with the estate affected by the easement, although both estates were originally united in the same owner, & one of them was afterwards granted by him with the benefit, while the other was left subject to the burthen. All these kinds of property, however, all these holdings, are well known to the law & familiarly dealt with by its principles. But it must not therefore be supposed that incidents of a novel kind can be devised & attached to property, at the fancy or caprice of any owner. It is clearly inconvenient both to the science of the law & to the public weal, that such a latitude should be given (BROUGHAM, C.).—KEPPEL v. BAILEY (1834), 2 My. & K. 517; *Coop. temp. 91. — Boats for hire on canal.]—The proprietors of a canal by deed granted to pltf. the sole & exclusive right of putting or using pleasure-boats for hire on the canal:—Held: this did not confer such an interest in pltf. as to give him a right of action against another person for using pleasure-boats for hire on the canal.

It appears to me a right of this sort cannot be created so as to constitute a property. It is merely a licence or covenant that the party may do the particular thing. He may sue in the name of the grantor so as to prevent strangers from intervening, if the grantor gives him permission in order to carry out the grant. A new species of incorporeal hereditament cannot be created at the will & pleasure of an individual owner of an estate; he must be contented to take the sort of estate & the right to dispose of it as he finds the law settled by decisions, or controlled by Act of Parliament. He may grant what he pleases, but he cannot carve out the property so as to enable the grantee to bring an action against the grantor for the sort of right he claims in this case (POLLOCK, C.B.).—*HILL v. 94. — Support of railway by coal.]—(1) A colliery co., who were the owners of coal under & adjacent to a railway, gave notice to the railway co. under Railways Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845 (c. 20), s. 78, of their intention to work the coal. The railway co. thereupon gave notice to the colliery co. under the sect. that they were willing to make compensation for the coal. The amount of the compensation having been fixed by arbitration, the railway co. paid that amount, & the colliery co. executed an instrument under seal by which they acknowledged receipt of the amount in satisfaction of all claims by them in respect of the coal, & undertook to leave the coal unworked:—Held: the right of the railway co. to have the coal left unworked came into existence when the notices were given under the above sect.

The fetter so accepted by the owner could not be made the subject of a grant or conveyance so as to bind the lands in the hands of successive owners. It is an arbitrary fetter debarring the owner from dealing with a given area of land in a particular way irrespective of whether it is more or less than is actually required for the support of the railway & whether or not substituted support is supplied by shoring or other means. The right to enforce such a restriction could not, in my judgment, be the subject of a grant so as to bind the land in the hands of successive owners. Nothing but a statute could create such a right, & a statute has created it (COLLINS, L.J.).

(2) Such a right differs from a right of support, being more extensive in some respects, & less so in others. In particular it differs in this, that the obligation under it is purely negative; whereas a right of support to buildings is an easement not purely negative, & is capable of being created by grant. There is no authority that a right or obligation such as that which arises under the above sect. is capable of being created by grant (STIRLING, L.J.).—*GREAT NORTHERN RY. Co. v. The sect. also applies to the lease of an easement over the same property.

The sect. also applies to the lease of an easement over the same property.

A life tenant without the consent of the trustees agreed to let the park, together with an easement over the mansion house, for a term of years. The lessees entered & held under the agreement, which contained no provision as to title. The lessor died without being required to execute a lease, & the lessees were ejected by the remainderman. The deed also referred to another deed as then prepared, which when executed was dated Mar. 13, 1869, whereby B., in pursuance of this agreement & in consideration of the conveyance of Whiteacre, covenanted & granted with & to A., his heirs & assigns, that it should be lawful for them & the

The deed also referred to another deed as then prepared, which when executed was dated Mar. 13, 1869, whereby B., in pursuance of this agreement & in consideration of the conveyance of Whiteacre, covenanted & granted with & to A., his heirs & assigns, that it should be lawful for them & the

In 1838 the estate was partitioned by deed between A., B., & C., the co-owners, the reversion of part of the canal being conveyed to the use of B. & the abutting lands to A. & C. severally. In 1839 B. conveyed his reversion in that part of the canal to the lessors:—Held: in the construction of the lease of 1820, the right of way across the canal reserved by the lease was a regrant to the lessors as owners of the reversion of the demised land & not to them as owners of the land intersected by the canal; & accordingly, when by the conveyance by B. in 1839, to the lessee the term became merged in the reversion, the rights of A. & C. over the land comprised in that conveyance were thereupon extinguished.—*DYNEVOR (LORD) v. The co. also agreed to make a certain defined level crossing. On Dec. 31, 1847, the landowner conveyed the strip to the railway co., reserving to himself, his heirs, appointees, & assigns, the defined level crossing & the right to make a tunnel at his or their own expense, the level crossing & the privilege of making a tunnel being accepted in lieu of all other accommodation works. The site of the tunnel was in no way defined:—Held: (1) as against the original covenantors, the railway co., the provision in the agreement as to the tunnel was a personal contract & was not obnoxious to the rule against perpetuities; (2) the benefit of that contract could be specially assigned to a lessee of part of the severed lands during the continuance of the lease; (3) as the agreement & reservation amounted to a regrant of an easement by the railway co. to the landowner, & not to an exception out of the land granted by him to the co., the right to select the site of the tunnel was vested in the landowner, his heirs, appointees, & assigns, & the agreement & reservation were not void for uncertainty. 119. ———. ———. Right to flow of water.] — (1) A parol licence after it is executed at the expense of the grantee, is not countermandable by the grantor. Where, therefore, pltf.'s father gave deft. leave, by parol, to lower the bank of a river & erect a weir, whereby a part of the water which flowed before to pltf.'s mill was diverted: — Held: his son could not maintain an action against defts. for continuing the weir, although his father, a few years after the licence was given, had required them to raise up the bank & pull down the weir.

For it cannot be denied that the right to the flow of the water formerly belonging to the owner of pltf.'s mill could only pass by grant as an incorporeal hereditament & not by parol licence. But we think the operation & effect of the licence after it has been completely executed by defts. is sufficient to relieve them from the burthen of restoring to its former state what has been done under the licence (TINDAL, C.J.).

(2) Suppose A. authorise B. by express licence to build a house on B.'s own land close adjoining to some of the windows of A.'s house so as to interrupt part of the light; could he afterwards compel B. to pull the house down again simply by giving notice that he countermanded the licence? 120. ———. ———.] — A verbal licence is not sufficient to confer an easement of having a drain in the land of another to convey water; & such licence may be revoked, though it has been acted upon.

In 1815 A. cut a drain in the land of B. to a spring, the water from which he appropriated as it ran through his own land. In 1833 B. stopped the drain: — Held: B. was entitled so to do, no right having been acquired by user or length of possession. — COCKER v. COWPER (1834), 1 Cr. M. & R. 418; 5 Tyr. 103; 149 E. 121. ———. ———.] — The right to a flow of water in a goit or artificial channel over another's land is a well known easement, & is the subject of property & grant, & not merely of licence. In order, therefore, immediately to bind the original grantor, the creation of such a right must be by deed under seal. But even though sixty years' possession & enjoyment of such a right under a document not under seal may perchance not bind the original grantor & his heirs; yet the actual possession & enjoyment gives a good & valid right of action against a wrongdoer, a superior riparian proprietor who, by abstracting water from the stream, so damages the flow as injuriously to affect a mill fed by the water flowing through such a goit.

A riparian landowner can grant to a non-riparian landowner the flow of water from the stream to his premises, for the use of the premises; & the grantee may sue for a disturbance of his enjoyment by a higher riparian owner.

The rights of a riparian proprietor with respect to the stream are limited only by those of persons in a similar & analogous position with respect to the stream as himself; & if, therefore, he grants to one not a riparian proprietor a right to abstract water from the stream, the grantee can sue only the grantor for any interference with him. But if two adjoining riparian proprietors agree to divert the stream so that it shall run in two channels instead of one, the water passing again into the old stream below their land, & flowing down to the lower proprietors as before, the case is different (CHANNELL, B.).

A goit is to all intents & purposes a new stream, & any person having land upon it would have the right of a riparian proprietor to use the water in any way not interfering with others. There is no reason why the law applicable to ordinary running streams should not be applicable to such a stream, for it is natural stream or flow of water, though flowing in an artificial channel (CHANNELL, cannot be created by parol, & a parol agreement would be terminated by a conveyance to a third person from the party agreeing to give the power. — BREWING v. BERRYMAN (1873), 2 Fug. 115. — CAN.

124. ——— Light.]—The mere physical fact of the existence of a window overlooking land does not put the purchaser of that land upon inquiry as to whether the window is privileged or not.

Where, therefore, an agreement between adjacent owners provided for enjoyment of a certain window without obstruction:—Held: the purchaser for value of the servient tenement, without notice of the agreement, but knowing of the existence of the window, was not bound by the agreement.

This agreement is one which cannot bind deft. in any way, not being by deed, unless he bought with notice or knowledge of the equities created by it. 125. ——— Statute of Frauds, s. 4.]—The doctrine of part performance of a parol agreement which enables proof of it to be given, notwithstanding Stat. Frauds, applies to all cases in which a ct. of equity would entertain a suit for specific performance if the alleged contract had been in writing. Although the most obvious case of part performance is where deft. is in possession of land of pltf. under the parol agreement, yet the doctrine applies to a parol agreement for an easement, although no interest in land is intended to be acquired.

If, therefore, an easement is not an "interest in land" under Stat. Frauds, s. 4, it follows that although no such incorporeal hereditament can be granted except by deed, an agreement for such a grant need not be in writing as a contract for an interest in land (KAY, J.).—MCMANUS v. The E. line of railway became vested in plffs., as lessees thereof for 999 years. Disputes arose between the cos., which ended in defts. preventing plffs. from running their engines, etc., on the line between G. & N., & giving them a formal notice to determine the agreement. On motion, an injunction was granted to restrain defts. from obstructing plffs. running their engines, etc., over that part of defts.' line mentioned in the agreement:—Held: (1) the agreement was permanent, & could not be determined without the consent of both parties, & was not a mere licence revocable at the will of either; (2) an agreement to grant an easement of this nature to a corporate body need not be by deed, & might be permanent, although it was to the co. only, & not to the co. & their successors.—*GREAT NORTHERN RY. 155. ———— Apparent & continuous.]—Certain land, part lying in the parish of N., part in the parish of V., belonged, in 1820, to H. & P., each being seised of an undivided moiety of the whole. A right of way existed from a farm, part of this property, in N., across certain lands on the property in V., part of the same farm, to another farm on the property in V.; & this right of way had for many years been used by the occupiers of either farm. In 1820, by a deed of partition, H. conveyed his undivided moiety of the part of the property in N. to P., including, among other farms, so much of the farm lying in N. & V. as was in N., "with every of their rights, members, easements & appurtenances." P. also, by the deed, conveyed his undivided moiety of that part of the property lying in V. to H. The deed contained no express reservation of the right of way to either party. Pltf., the present occupier, & the previous occupiers of the farm in N., used the right of way from 1820 to 1859, when it was obstructed by deft., the then occupier of the farm in V. In an action by pltf. for such obstruction:—Held: he could not recover; the right of way not passing under the deed of partition, & not being an apparent & continuous easement necessarily passing upon the severance of the property, as incident to the separate enjoyment of the portion severed.—WORTHINGTON v. 156. ————.]—By a lease in 1877 the lessor demised to the lessee a rectangular plot of building land, A., in the corner formed by the intersection of two public roads, of which one passed along the front & the other along the side of the land. By a lease of even date the same lessor demised to the same lessee another rectangular building plot, B., immediately adjoining A., & also facing the front road but having no direct access to the side road. Both plots abutted at the rear upon a boundary or party wall. The lessee then built a house on each plot & laid out the ground at the back as a garden to the house, with the exception of a narrow strip at the rear of both plots, which he formed into & used as a road or back way from the house & garden, B., into the public road along the side of A. This back way was bounded on the one side by the party-wall & on the other by the garden walls of A. & B., a gate into it being made by the lessee in the garden wall of B. The house on B. completely blocked all access from the front to the garden behind, except by a tiled passage or hall forming part of the house, with a door at each end, one door opening into the garden. In 1878 the lessee assigned to the deft. the whole of plot B., as described in the lease thereof, & also the house thereon, "with their rights, easements, & appurtenances." In 1879 the lessee assigned to pltf.'s predecessor in title the whole of plot A., as described in the lease thereof, & also the house thereon. Each assignment thus included part of the soil on which the back way had been formed, but neither deed contained any reference to the back way, & in particular the assignment to pltf.'s predecessor contained no reservation of a right

t. "Appurtenant"—Effect of further words—"Therewith held or used."]—The words "appurtenant" or "belonging" will ordinarily carry only actual existing easements, & therefore will carry no right of way over the land of the grantor, though, in certain circumstances, even these words will have a wider construction. Where further words are used, such as "therewith held or used," such words will carry a way formerly enjoyed as an easement, but as to which the right has been suspended by unity of possession. But such words will not carry a way made by the owner of both properties during the unity of possession for his own greater convenience in the use of the two properties jointly. But where, during the unity of possession, a way,

158. ————] — (1) By indenture of lease of Sept. 23, 1878, A. demised to B. a public-house at H., "together with all ways, waters, watercourses, drains, paths, lights, easements, profits, advantages, & appurtenances whatsoever to the premises belonging or in any wise appertaining." At the rear of the premises was a path across the garden to a doorway in the boundary wall which opened on to a private road, the property of A., leading to H. heath. On Oct. 1, 1878, A., pursuant to an agreement of Nov. 1867, granted to deft. C. a lease for 99 years of land which comprised the private road leading from the back of the public-house to the heath, & on Oct. 9, C. built up the doorway in the boundary wall. This way had, by special agreement between himself & his lessee C., for several years been used by D., a former tenant of the public-house whose tenancy had been determined in June, 1878:—Held: the way in question not being a way of necessity, did not pass to B. by the general words in the lease of Sept. 1878; & deft. C. was not estopped from denying the existence of the alleged right of way by having allowed D. to use it whilst he was the occupier of the public-house. (2) In Aug. 1878, deft. A. offered for sale by public auction a lease of a public-house. By the conditions of sale it was provided that "the lease to be granted shall contain the covenants, clauses & provisions & be in the form or to the effect set forth in the draft lease which will be produced on the sale & may be seen at the office of the auctioneers for seven days previous to the day of sale," & that "the property is presumed to be correctly described; but, as the premises may be viewed & the draft lease inspected at the office of the auctioneers, the purchaser shall be deemed to have bought with full knowledge of the contents thereof; & no error, misdescription or omission in the particulars shall annul the sale, & no compensation shall be required for any such error, misdescription or omission." There was no reference either in the conditions of sale or in the draft lease to the existence of any right or way from the garden of the public-house to the heath, but at the time of the sale, the auctioneer bond fide, but without any authority from A., & acting entirely upon an inference drawn by himself from the appearance of the premises, & believing that there was a right of way through the same & over the private road, & so to the heath, stated publicly that there was such a way, & spoke of it as enhancing the value of the premises:—Held: the evidence of what passed at the time of the sale was admissible as against the vendor; but no action could, after the completion of the purchase, be maintained against him to recover compensation for this innocent misrepresentation by the auctioneer.—BRETT v. CLOWSER (1880), 5 C. P. D. 376.

162. ————] — A question has often arisen where unity of ownership in land & in a right of way over the land has taken place, as to what subsequent grant by the owner is sufficient to convey the continued enjoyment of the easement, as well as the land itself. It seems from the decisions that, inasmuch as the unity of ownership extinguishes the easement, the right of way cannot pass as simply appurtenant to the land to which it was formerly attached, though it continues to exist in point of user. But, though it does not exist as a right, it will pass by a conveyance of the land, if proper words be used to pass it, as, if all ways "used & enjoyed" with the land are conveyed. Applying this doctrine to the question before us, it seems to me that the right to the watercourse here in dispute passed to deft. under the words of the conveyance (WILLIAMS, J.).—*WARDLE v. 165. ————] — Easement of necessity—Way.] — In an action for a disturbance of a right of way, it appeared that, in the year 1839, A., being the owner of five closes, two of which, called the H. closes, were separated by two of the others from the only available highway, sold the entire property in three lots. M. purchased the H. closes, N. one of the other closes, & D. the remaining closes. Over the latter the tenants of A., from the year 1823, had used a way for the occupation of the H. closes. The deeds of conveyance to the three purchasers were all executed on the same day, but it could not be ascertained in what order of priority they were executed. No special grant or reservation of any particular way was contained in any of them; but in the conveyance to M. were the usual words, "together with all ways, roads, etc., to the closes belonging or appertaining." For several years after the execution of the conveyances, pltf., who occupied the H. closes as tenant of M., had used the way in question; but, in 1843, deft., who had purchased D.'s closes, disputed pltf.'s right & obstructed the way:—Held: (1) assuming that the conveyance to M. was executed before that to D., pltf. was clearly entitled to the way, for where a person having a close surrounded by his land grants the close to another, the grantee has a way over the grantor's land as incident to the grant; (2) assuming that the conveyance to D. was executed before that to M., pltf. was nevertheless entitled to the way, for while the property in the H. closes remained in A., he had that way of necessity, as being the most convenient mode of access to his premises, & it passed by his conveyance to M. under the words "all ways to the closes belonging or appertaining."—PINNINGTON v. GALLAND (1853), 9 Exch. 1; 1 C. L. R. 819; 22 L. J. Ex. 348; 22 L. T. O. S. 41; 150 E. R. 1.

166. — Easement enjoyed de facto—Way.]—Pltf. & deft. were tenants under the same landlord of adjoining farms near the sea coast to which a highway ran through deft.'s farm; pltf.'s farm communicated with the highway by a private road which joined the highway at A. From a point on pltf.'s farm & on the private road an ancient lane ran to a spot on the highway nearer than A., to the sea coast; this lane was not only the nearest way from pltf.'s farm to the sea coast but was also level, whereas the private road was steep & hilly. The land, which was a formed roadway bounded on either side by turf banks & hedges, ran wholly through deft.'s land except for a few yards where it started from the private road on pltf.'s farm, but it had no communication on either side with deft.'s land & was only open to deft.'s access at the point where it joined the highway; it had been used for many years by pltf. & had been from time to time repaired by him. Prior to 1873 pltf. & deft. were tenants from year to year on their respective farms; in that year the landlord granted to deft. a lease of his farm, which contained no reference to the lane or to its user by pltf.; but the soil of the lane was admittedly included in the admeasurements of deft.'s farm. In 1878 the landlord granted to pltf. a lease of his farm " & all houses, buildings, & appurtenances thereto belonging " in which no specific mention was made of the lane or of any right of way over it. Deft. having interfered with pltf.'s user of the lane:—Held: (1) the lease to deft. did not amount to a demise of the soil of the lane free from pltf.'s right of way, inasmuch as the lessor, not being in possession at the date of the lease, could not make such a demise without derogating from the grant to pltf. under which his then existing tenancy was constituted; (2) there was an implied reservation of the right of way out of deft.'s lease; & (3) the right of way over the lane passed to pltf. by the lease of 1878 under the word "appurtenances."—THOMAS v. not including easements.]—The London School Board gave pltf. notice to treat for "the land & premises in the schedule with the appurtenances." Pltf. had used a way from the premises purchased over other land of his own to a main road, but such way was not a way of necessity, nor was it a marked way, or a metalled road, being merely across a piece of grass land. It would, however, have passed under such general words as "ways at the time of conveyance occupied or enjoyed with" the lands sold. The vendors claimed to limit the general words, including the above, which would be imported by sect. 6, sub-sects. 1 & 2 of the above Act, unless limited under sect. 6, sub-sect. 4, contending that they had not sold any such right of way, nor in fact, had the notice to treat included such easement, though it was within the powers of the board to purchase it. The School Board contended that unless expressly excluded by the contract they were entitled of right to the full general words:—Held: they were entitled to exclude from the conveyance the general words implied in a conveyance of land by the above Act, so as to prevent the purchaser from acquiring the right to use the way as one "enjoyed with or reputed as appurtenant to" the land & buildings conveyed.—Re PECK & LONDON SCHOOL BOARD'S CONTRACT, [1893] 2 Ch. 315; 62 L. 183. ——— Adjoining land described as building land.]—In a conveyance of a house the description of adjoining land belonging to the grantor as "building land" does not show a "contrary intention" within sect. 6 (4) of the above Act so as to exclude the grantee's right to light under sect. 6 (2). The grantee of a house has a prima facie right to light as against his grantor, & the burden of showing that that right is limited or restricted lies on the grantor.—*BROOMFIELD v. 184. ——— ———.]—Where a landowner contracts to grant a lease of a vacant piece of land when a house of a specified character is built thereon, & accordingly a house is built & a lease of the house & land is granted, the doctrine that a grantor cannot derogate from his own grant must be applied, not to the vacant piece of land, but to the land with the house on it according to the contract, which must be taken for this purpose to have been fulfilled. If the land forms part of a building estate, & the contract is entered into by reference to a plan in which the estate is marked out in building plots, with a building line marked on the plan so as to extend through all the plots, including the land which is the subject of the contract, the application of the doctrine is not thereby limited or restricted, & in the absence of further evidence of the existence of a building scheme or of any reservation of right to the grantor, the purchaser from him of an adjoining plot will be restrained from building on his land so as to interfere with the access of light to the house as theretofore enjoyed.

It is inconceivable to me that, whatever effect the agreement might have had in fixing the rights of the parties, the words of the statute ought not to be read into that conveyance. It seems to me impossible to say that you shall not import into the conveyance words which the statute has enacted shall be imported into it. Lot 2 was sold, but Lot 1 remained in the hands of the vendors:—Held: the purchaser of Lot 2 was not entitled to have the conveyance in such a form as would give him the benefit of the general words as to right of way, etc., in sect. 6 of the above Act, but the vendors were entitled to limit the generality of those words.—Re HUGHES & ASHLEY'S CONTRACT, [1900] 2 Ch. 595; 69 L. There was no gate or opening to the piece of land from either road, & the public road was in a deep cutting about 20 ft. below the piece of land:—Held: (1) the way over the private road was not obvious & apparent, & did not pass to defts. under the general words imported into the conveyance by the above Act, there being no gate or opening into defts. land; (2) the way was not a way of necessity because the defts. could, though at some expense, cut a way from the public road.—*TITCHMARSH v. 191. — Easement incapable of express grant.—(1) By a building agreement between the Ecclesiastical Comrs. & deft. the right was given to him to enter upon a piece of land belonging to them for the purpose of erecting a number of houses upon it. As each house should be erected & completed to the satisfaction of the comrs. they agreed to grant a lease of it to deft. for 99 years. The lease was to be in a specified form, one of the clauses in which provided that the Comrs. should have power to erect on the land adjoining the demised land any buildings whatsoever, whether they should or should not affect or diminish the light enjoyed by the lessee. It was also provided by the agreement that nothing therein contained should be deemed to operate as an actual demise of the land to deft., or to create as between him & the comrs. the relation of tenant & landlord. On one of the plots deft. erected a house (No. 28), & the comrs. granted to him a lease of that house in the specified form. Dft. sold that house to pltf., & transferred the lease of it to them. He afterwards erected on an adjoining plot a house (No. 30) which when completed obstructed the access of light to some of the windows of pltf.'s house. They brought an action against deft. claiming an injunction & damages:—Held: at the time when deft. transferred the lease of No. 28 to pltf., he had not under the building agreement such an interest in the adjoining plot (No. 30), as would enable him to make an express grant of an easement of light over it, & consequently no such grant by him could be implied; (2) the provision of sect. 6, sub-sect. 2 of the above Act, that a conveyance of land with houses on it shall operate to convey with the land (inter alia) all lights appertaining to the land or enjoyed therewith, applies only to such lights as the grantor could grant by express words, & does not operate to convey an easement of light which he has no power to grant expressly.—*QUICKE v. Dft. was the owner of two houses adjoining each other, one in his own occupation, the other held by pltf. co. under a lease from deft., & occupied by their managers & servants carrying on their business. The houses were separated by a roadway leading to & forming part of deft.'s yard. By permission of deft., renewed from time to time to successive managers, pltf.'s servants & their predecessors in title had used in business hours a way across the yard to a door opening thereon in the back part of their premises for all purposes of their business. The entrance to the yard was closed by wooden doors, which were always locked by deft. at night, & he kept sole control of the key. Dft. sold to pltf. co. the house leased to them, & conveyed it by a deed containing no general words or reference to any right of way:—Held: such a right of way as pltf. had actually enjoyed at the date of the deed passed to them by virtue of the general words inserted in the deed by the above Act, though the enjoyment was wholly permissive & precarious.—*INTERNATIONAL TEA STORES CO. v. 194. — — — — —]—Pltf. was the owner of land & buildings including a fellmonger's yard in the occupation of a tenant, bounded on the east side by a river. Between the river & the yard was an open conduit running parallel with the river down to a culvert by which it was carried to deft.'s mill lower down. The premises now owned by pltf. & deft. had been in the ownership of the same person from 1779 until 1907, when pltf. purchased his present holding, while the mill was sold to deft.'s predecessor. According to the evidence, for a long period before 1907 the occupants of the fellmonger's yard had used the water in the conduit for the purposes of their business, but the repairs to the conduit had been carried out by the occupier of the mill, who had diverted the flow of water when necessary for that purpose. The conveyance to pltf. made no mention of any water right, but the mill was conveyed to deft.'s predecessors "with the full right & benefit of passage & running of water to the mill & premises as is now & heretofore used & enjoyed therewith":—Held: pltf. was entitled to a right of user of the conduit as enjoyed prior to the conveyance to him in 1907, such right, although permissive at the date of the grant, having become a legal right by virtue of the general words of sect. 6 of the

195. ———.]—A former owner of two farms D. & S. laid a pipe conveying water from S., the quasi-servient tenement, to D., the quasi-dominant tenement. In 1908 the then common owner let D. to W. on a year-to-year tenancy, & in 1911 he let S. to deft. on a similar tenancy. The tenancy agreements did not mention water rights:—Held: (1) W.'s agreement passed the water right by implication & involved an implied reservation in deft.'s agreement. In June, 1915, the owner conveyed to D. pltf. In Sept. 1915, W.'s tenancy expired. In Oct. 1915, the owner conveyed S. to deft., whose tenancy was still on foot. Neither of these conveyances mentioned any water rights:—Held: (2) the implied reservation in deft.'s agreement was not confined to W.'s tenancy but enabled the owner to grant an immediate water right to pltf. without derogating from deft.'s agreement; this water right passed under the general words of sect. 6 of the above Act; (3) even if there had been no such implied reservation in deft.'s tenancy agreement, the implied grant of water right would have bound the S. reversion subject to that agreement; (4) in any case deft. could no longer rely on his tenancy agreement, as he had shown an intention to acquire the fee in lieu of his tenancy, which was therefore merged. Semble: a tenancy from year to year cannot be kept on foot in perpetuity by a tenant who acquires the fee.—WESTWOOD v. HEYWOOD, [1921] 2 Ch. 130; 90 L. J. Ch. 515; 125 L. T. 761; 37 T. L. R. 851; 65 Sol. Jo. 753.

196. ———.]—Where land in common ownership is sold contemporaneously in lots to two purchasers, a right for one purchaser to go on the land of the other to clear a mill stream & repair its banks, there being no visible path or other sign of such user, will not pass by virtue of the words implied in the conveyance to him under sect. 6, sub-sect. 2, of the above Act, unless there has been before the severance of ownership a de facto enjoyment of the right, however precarious, by the occupier of that part of the land altogether apart from the ownership or occupation of the other part.—*LONG v. SUB-SECT. 7.—DURATION OF GRANT.

197. May be for less than estate in fee simple—Term of years.—A. being seised of an ancient mill, together with a stream of water diverted out of a river, & flowing thence to her mill, & B. being possessed of other mills, together with a stream of water diverted out of the same river, above the stream of A., by means of a head weir, & flowing thence through the lands of A. down to B.'s mills, as appurtenant to the same, B. erected upon other lands below the lands of A., & near the watercourse, two other mills, whereby it becoming necessary for B. to have a larger supply of water, he widened & deepened his watercourse in the soil of A., & raised & heightened the head weir, & thereby diverted the greatest part of the water into the watercourse for the use of his mills, so that the water was prevented from flowing down to the mill of A. so copiously as it had formerly done, & thereby A.'s mill became of no use. A. having recovered damages in one action against B. on this account, & having afterwards brought a second action for subsequent damages, in order to prevent all further disputes, B. agreed to take a grant from A. of the use & benefit of the watercourse so widened & deepened, & of the liberty of diverting the water out of the river. By lease reciting these facts, A., in consideration of £1,500 paid by B., demised to B. the use of the watercourse so widened & deepened as aforesaid, & the free liberty of diverting so much of the water of the river into & along the watercourse as should be necessary for the use of B.'s mills, habendum for the use of 99 years, if three persons therein named should so long live, at an annual rent. Soon after the execution of this deed A.'s mill was destroyed. B., or those claiming under him, continued to enjoy the watercourse & the use of the water during the term, & paid the rent. The lease having determined by the death of the last surviving cestui que vie, the person claiming under the grantee continued to enjoy the watercourse in the manner described in the grant, & paid rent for it:—Held: the reversion in the lands, upon which A.'s mill formerly stood, having vested in C., the latter might maintain indebitatus assumpsit for the use & occupation of the watercourse & the water running therein, against the persons who claimed under B.—DAVIS v. MORGAN (1825), 4 B. & C. 8; 6 Dow. & Ry. K. B. 42; 107 E. R. 962.

199. ———.]—Uncertain term.—(1) In a lease for 95 years, a right of way over the demised premises was reserved to the lessor & his heirs, so long as they should retain adjoining lands held in fee, & after he or they should alienate such adjoining lands then reserving to the lessor, his heirs & assigns, a different right:—Held: the reservations were valid, & on alienation of the freeholds, the right of way ceased.

(2) Defts., guardians of the poor, wrongfully claiming a right of way to their relieving office over pltf.'s lands, inviting paupers to come that way for relief; the trespass by the paupers causing serious injury to pltf's, an injunction was granted to restrain the guardians, "their servants, workmen & agents," from trespassing.

(3) In considering the injury, the possible as well as the actual use of the injured premises will be regarded.—AIDLEY v. ST. PANCRAS GUARDIANS (1870), 39 L. J. Ch. 871.

200. ———.]—Life estate.—A testator in 1830, before Wills Act, 1837 (c. 26), devised one field to P. & another to H., both adjoining, & added that H. should have the privilege or right of road for coals & dung, & necessary things, through a certain gate in P.'s field to the kitchen & garden. The way was the only access for carts & horses to H.'s field, & H. used it for bricks & hay:—Held: this was the grant only of a personal privilege for H.'s life, & did not pass to his assigns.—PYM v. HARRISON (1876), 33 L. T. 790; 40 J. P. 375, C. A.; revers. S. C. sub nom. PYNE v. HARRISON (1875), 40 J. P. 21.

adjoining houses, granted a lease of one of them to B. He afterwards leased the other to C., there then existing in it certain windows. After this B. accepted a new lease of his house from A.:—Held: B. could not alter his tenement so as to obstruct windows existing in C.'s house at the time of C.'s lease from A., though the windows were not twenty years old at the time of the alteration.—*COUTTS v. (2) The landlord of two adjoining houses granted a lease of one of the houses in consideration of the lessee making certain alterations, & in particular of his adding additional windows. The lessee of the adjoining house afterwards surrendered his lease & took a new lease of the premises:—Held: he was not entitled to obstruct the light of the new windows.—*DAVIES v. (2) There being a right to the access of light to windows in the walls of certain cottages, the walls of some of the cottages were set back & windows made in the new walls of the same size, & in the same relative positions as the former windows in the former walls:—Held: the easement of light was not thereby destroyed.

(3) In the case of another of the cottages the occupier made an addition thereto, & for the purpose of so doing built a new wall with a window in it outside the old wall & window at a different angle, but the old window remained inside the new one, & still continued to receive the light:—Held: the right to the access of light to the old window was not destroyed.

(2) In an action for an injunction against an adjoining owner & his builder to restrain an interference with light & for trespass, the builder severed in his defence from his employer & appeared separately at the trial, when an injunction was granted with costs against deft. the adjoining owner:—Held: under the circumstances, the builder was entitled to complete indemnity, & to an order for the payment of his solr. & client costs by his co-deft.

Reservations & exceptions of easements generally.—See Sect. 1, sub-sect. 4, ante.

206. Whether reservation will be implied—General rule.—Held: in a lease & conveyance there was, in the circumstances of the case, no implied reservation of a right of way.

It is impossible . . . to contend that an implied reservation can arise upon a conveyance by deed unless there is some very cogent necessity for such an implication such as arises where the easement claimed by way of reservation is either one without which there could be no enjoyment of some property of the grantor retained in his hands as in the case of a way of necessity, or when the subject of the grant . . . is such that it can hardly be supposed that either party did not contemplate the enjoyment by the grantor of an easement reciprocal to one granted (WILLS, J.).—*GORDON v. In 1882 she mortgaged house B. without reserving any right of way through this passage; & she died in 1886, having by her will, dated in the same year, devised house A. to ptff.'s predecessor in title, & house B. to deft.; the will contained no words descriptive of or appropriate to any right enjoyment of an adjacent house of the vendor. In 1867 pltf. bought houses in M., the backs of which abutted on a street or way on the opposite side of which were certain cottages. In 1867, he purchased these cottages but by a different title. Both sets of premises had existed in their then state for more than twenty years. In 1870, pltf. sold the cottages to D. & ultimately D.'s interest therein became vested in defts., who pulled down the cottages & erected a large building upon the site of them, & also upon a portion of the intervening street or way, & so obstructed the light to pltf.'s windows. The conveyance to D. contained no reservation of any easement to pltf.'s houses; & it professed to convey the land up to the back wall of pltf.'s premises:—Held: notwithstanding pltf.'s houses had acquired an absolute & indefeasible right to light at the time of the conveyance of the cottages to D., inasmuch as that conveyance was without reservation, defts. were guilty of no wrongful obstruction of pltf.'s lights.—ELLIS v. The leases were granted with a view to the erection upon the whole block of one large edifice of which the several parts & the internal arrangements were to be connected together for a common use & occupation; so, however, as to be separable, if desired, into seven separate buildings. J. being in the occupation of the whole while the buildings were being erected, mortgaged C., F. & G., by a sub-lease which recited the building scheme & the original leases of C., F. & G., & contained stipulations for the completion of the buildings on C., F. & G. After the buildings had been substantially completed, J. mortgaged E. by a deed which recited the lease of E., & assigned the buildings thereon, subject to the covenants in the lease, to one who had notice of the general plan of the buildings. J. then mortgaged B. On J.'s bkpcy. the several mtgees. obtained foreclosure decrees in respect of B., C. & E., respectively:—Held: (1) though there was no express reservation of the right to light, yet looking at the plans, the covenants in the original leases, & the mtge. deeds, the mtgees. of C. & E. respectively were by reasonable implication precluded from interfering with the light to the windows in B. which looked out upon C. & E. respectively, & might be restrained accordingly in an action by the mtgee. of B.; (2) the mtgee. of B., could maintain such an action although he had surrendered the lease of B. & taken a fresh lease from the original lessor: for, without deciding what effect the merger of the original lease might have, whenever the lease of B. came to an end either by surrender, forfeiture or otherwise, the original lessor would have the same rights to light as the mtgee. would have had if the original lease had subsisted.

216. — Use of drain.—(1) Where the owner of two or more adjoining houses sells & conveys one of them to a purchaser, such house is entitled to the benefit & is subject to the burden of all existing drains communicating with the other house, without any express reservation or grant for that purpose.

Pltf.'s & deft.'s houses adjoined each other. They had formerly been one house & were converted into two by the owner of the whole property. Subsequently deft.'s house was conveyed to him, & after that pltf. took a conveyance of his house. At the times of these conveyances, a drain ran under pltf.'s house & thence under deft.'s, & discharged itself into the common sewer. Water from the caves of deft.'s house fell on pltf.'s house, & then ran into a drain on pltf.'s premises & thence through the drain into the common sewer. Pltf.'s house was drained through this drain:—Held: pltf. was, by implied grant, entitled to have the use of the drain as it was used at the time of deft.'s purchase of his house.

(2) It was urged that there could be no implied agreement unless the easement was apparent & continuous. Deft. stated he was not aware of this drain at the time of the conveyance to him; but it is clear that he must have known or ought to have known that some drainage then existed, & if he had inquired he would have known of this drain, . . . & we agree . . . that by "apparent signs" must be understood not only those which must necessarily be seen, but those which may be seen or known on a careful inspection by a person ordinarily conversant with the subject (WATSON, B.).—*PYER v. 217. — Use of premises.—A shop was demised by W. to M. as the same was late in the occupation of C. The shop was only one storey in height, & had a flat lead roof, to which there was access from an adjoining house through a glass door, but the house & shop were distinct tenements. On the occasion of the lease to C. he granted a licence to his lessor, to whom the adjoining house belonged, to use the roof as a flower-garden during the term. W. afterwards became the owner of the adjoining house & of the shops, & C.'s term in the shop was surrendered to him. W. then made the above lease of the shop to M.

& W. afterwards demised the adjoining house to L. with the right to use the roof of the shop & to erect a light building thereon. L. proceeded to erect a glass photographic house on the roof. M. filed his bill praying for an injunction to restrain L. from doing so:—Held: the demise to M. included the roof as well as every other part of the shop, & an injunction against L. was accordingly granted.—*MARTYR v. 220. — Support.—In 1797 a lease of two adjoining houses was granted ending in 1895. The houses were afterwards sublet separately, & in 1861 each was held under a sublease, which expired a few days before the headlease, the one by A. & the other by B. Up to that year neither house supported any part of the other. A., with the permission of B., had raised the wall between the gardens of the houses by about two feet, & in Oct. 1864 B. agreed to let A. maintain the wall during the remainder of the headlease less the last twenty days thereof in consideration of 5s. a year. In 1870 B.'s sublease having been assigned to C., he, with A.'s permission, built with beams into the wall, & A. agreed that C. might maintain & enjoy the wall during the remainder of the headlease less the last twenty days thereof, in consideration of 5s. a year. In 1871, A., without surrendering his sublease, obtained a new lease for 990 years, to be reckoned from that date, but, as regarded possession, to take effect from one day after the expiration of the subsisting headlease of 1797, i.e. 1895. In 1889 C. also obtained a long lease of his house framed in the same way. By the lease of 1871 the lessors reserved the mines & minerals under the demised property, but nothing further. A. thereby covenanted to keep up the value of the demised property, by maintaining & repairing the then existing house, or by rebuilding or improving it, or by erecting one or more other houses in lieu of it or in addition to it; & that he would not do anything which might tend to the annoyance or damage of the other tenants of adjoining land belonging to the lessors, including that which they afterwards let to C. Subsequently A.'s house became vested in pltf.s & C.'s house in deft. It was admitted that the lease of 1871 comprised the whole of the wall referred to in the agreements of 1864 & 1870; & since 1895, when the headlease of 1797 fell in & these agreements came to an end, the wall, treated in 1864 as B.'s, & the erection upon it had been pltf.s' for the rest of their present lease:—Held: the lease of 1871 contained no implied reservation on the ground of necessity nor upon any other principle, to the lessors of the right to have the adjoining house supported by pltf.s' wall; & therefore, deft. had not acquired any right to keep the ends of her beams in pltf.s' wall.—HOWARTH v. ARMSTRONG (1897), 77 L. T. 62; 13 T. L. R. 529, C. A.

223. ——— Easement of necessity — Support.]—Where several houses belonging to the same owner are built together, so that each requires the mutual support of the neighbouring house, & the owner parts with one of the houses, the right to such mutual support is not thereby lost; the legal presumption being that the owner reserves to himself such right, & at the same time, grants to the new owner an equal right; & consequently, if the owner parts with several of the houses at different times, the possessors still enjoy the right to mutual support, the right being wholly independent of the question of the priority of their titles.

Where houses have been erected in common by the same owner upon a plot of ground, & therefore, necessarily requiring mutual support, there is, either by a presumed grant or by a presumed reservation, a right to such mutual support (POLLACK, C.B.).—RICHARDS v. JENKINS (1868), 18 L. T. 437; 17 W. R. 30.

Where an easement is in the nature of an easement of necessity, there is no need of an express reservation of such easement in a conveyance of the property to be affected by the easement; & such reservation is a matter of legal presumption to be implied from the nature of the transaction between the grantor & the grantee.

Pltfs. here had an "easement of necessity," for these houses were bound to be injured & let down by the action of deft. For such there was no need of an express reservation of such a right (MANISTY, J.).—SHUBROOK v. TUFNELL (1882), 46 L. T. 886; sub nom. SHERBROOK v. TUFNELL, 46 J. P. 694, D. 226. ——— Use of wharf.]—(1) The owner & occupier of a freehold dock & wharf adjoining, put them up for sale in separate lots. The wharf only was sold, & was conveyed to the purchaser in fee simple absolutely. For many years previously the bowsprits of vessels in the dock had been allowed to project over a portion of the wharf.—Held: notwithstanding the purchaser had notice of the mode of user, there was not, on the grant of the wharf, any implied reservation to the grantor of a right to have the bowsprits projecting over the wharf in the same manner as prior to & at the time of the grant.

(2) Semble: the doctrine of the "disposition of the owner of two tenements" (destination du père de famille) is not applicable to the severance of tenements by grant for valuable consideration.

(3) A grantor cannot derogate from his own grant; & although on the severance for valuable consideration of two tenements belonging to the same owner, a reservation of an easement of absolute necessity, or of a right inseparable from the tenement retained, may be implied, yet if a grant for value be unlimited in terms & without express reservation, there is no implied reservation of an easement (not having a legal existence prior to the unity of ownership) which at the time of the grant was enjoyed by the tenement retained, even though such easement be continuous & apparent.

A purchaser takes his purchase as it is described & conveyed to him in & by his deed of conveyance; if he buys the fee simple of a tenement, & has it conveyed to him without reservation, notice of the previous mode of user by his vendor for the convenience of the adjoining tenement is immaterial; for the condition of the tenement granted is thenceforth determined by the contract of alienation & deed of conveyance, & not by the previous user of the vendor during his joint ownership.

(4) The easement claimed by pltf. is not "continuous" for that means something the use of which is constant & uninterrupted, neither is it an "apparent easement" for except when a ship is actually in the dock with her bowsprit projecting beyond its limits there is no sign of its existence; neither is it a "necessary easement," for that means something without which the enjoyment of the dock could not be had at all (WESTBURY, C.).—*SUFFIELD v. 229. ——— [Party wall.]—Prior to 1886 pltf.'s predecessor in title built C. House on his own land with a wall to the west, in which were flues & fireplaces used only for C. House, & on the west side flues & fireplaces not so used, but which might be used for any adjoining house built on an adjoining & then vacant piece of land belonging to deft. In 1880 deft., being about to build a house on his land, agreed in writing with pltf.'s predecessor for the sale to deft. of the western half of the western wall of C. House, that wall being treated as divided from top to bottom, throughout its whole length, by a vertical plane in the centre thereof (which plane, if it had been a physical division, would have divided half of each of the flues, including those used for C. House, from the other half). Deft. then built on his land a house called G., adjoining C. House, & so connected with it that the fireplaces on the west side & the flues connected with them were used for the purposes of G., as had been intended. Pltf. purchased C. House in 1900, & subsequently the flue connected with deft.'s dining-room became defective, in the sense that by reason of cracks which developed in the surrounding masonry smoke found its way therefrom through pltf.'s half of the party-wall into his rooms & occasioned damage. The cracks were caused by a subsidence in deft.'s house, but the cause of the subsidence was undetermined, & there was no evidence of negligence by deft. in building his house or otherwise, or want of reasonable precaution:—Held: deft. was not liable for the damage.

Where a man grants a divided moiety of an outside wall of his house with intent to make it a party wall between that house & a house to be built on his neighbour's adjoining land, the law implies the grant & reservation in favour of the grantor & grantee respectively of such easements as may be necessary to carry out the common intention as to the user of the wall, the nature of the easements varying with the particular circumstances of each case. Subject to such easements the owner of each half may deal with it in such manner as he pleases, & if he uses it only for the contemplated purposes & without negligence or want of reasonable care & precaution he is not liable for any nuisance or inconvenience occasioned by such user.

In the first place it appears to me that on principle the owner of a servient tenement cannot so deal with it as to render the easement over it incapable of being enjoyed or more difficult of enjoyment by the owner of the dominant tenement. . . . In the next place that, apart from any special local custom or express contract, the owner of a servient tenement is not bound to execute any repairs necessary to ensure the enjoyment or convenient enjoyment of the easement by the owner of the dominant tenement (Parker, J.).

Again, the grant of an easement is prima facie also the grant of such ancillary rights as are reasonably necessary to its exercise or enjoyment. Thus the grantee of an easement for a watercourse through his neighbour's land may, when reasonably necessary, enter his neighbour's land for the purpose of repairing, & may repair, such watercourse. On this principle each party in the present case may do such acts on the property of the other as are reasonably necessary to the continued enjoyment of the easement; for example, each party would be entitled to repair the other's half of the wall in question so far as was reasonably necessary for the enjoyment of any easement impliedly granted or reserved (Parker, J.).—*Jones v. 239. ——— Derogation from grant.] — (1) The owner of an estate granted a lease of a plot of ground to A. who covenanted that he, his executors, administrators or assigns, would not during the term do on the premises anything which should be an annoyance to the neighbourhood or to the lessor or his tenants, or diminish the value of the adjoining property, nor build, nor allow to be built, on the ground any building or erection without first submitting the plans to the lessor & obtaining his approval. The landlord some years afterwards granted a lease of an adjoining plot to B., who entered into a similar restrictive covenant. 248 i. ——— Apparent & continuous — Drainage.] —Pltf. owned the eastern half of a double house, & deft. owned the other half, which was situate higher up the hill than pltf.'s. From the sink in deft.'s house a drain was used, which came through the partition wall, under the floor in the basement of pltf.'s house & connected with the sewer in the street. Pltf.'s sink connected with the same drain. There was no other connection between the sewer & the two houses. Both parties derived their title from G., who had devised one house to each of two nieces. Deft. claimed a right of drainage over pltf.'s property, as an implied grant when the severance of ownership took place:—Held: although it was a continuous easement, it was not an apparent & necessary easement to the enjoyment of deft.'s house.—TANNER v. HISLER (1898), 40 N. S. R. 250.—CAN.

g. ——— Way.] —Implication of a grant of easement upon the severance of a tenement may extend to a "way," but that is so only where there has been some permanence in the sisting of a tanyard & a house & garden made a cesspool in a corner of the garden & a drain, to carry the water into it from the tanyard, which gradually sloped down towards the garden. In 1819 he sold the two properties to different persons. The conveyances made no allusion to the existence of the drain & cesspool:—Held: the easement passed by an implied grant with the tanyard.—EWART v. COCHRANE (1861), 5 L. T. 1; 25 J. 249. ————]—Unfinished buildings.—Although the occupiers of contiguous tenements, held under one title, may sometimes set up implied grants, from the original owner, of easements not expressly mentioned, this only applies to such easements as are apparent & continuous, that is to say, clearly indicated by the condition of the premises at the time of the division of title, & if the premises are then unfinished & the buildings are in a skeleton state, so that though there are openings left in the walls, it is uncertain for what purpose they are intended, whether as doors or windows, & if as doors, then in what direction & to what extent the ways thereto are designed to be used, there will be no such implied grants, the easements not being apparent & continuous. A plan attached to the grants, if it leave the matter equally uncertain, will not aid the implication.—GLAVE v. HARDING (1858), 27 L. J. Ex. 286; 22 J. P. 531.

250. ————]—Water.—In 1860 the owner of properties A. & B. made a drain from a tank on property B. to a lower tank on the same property, & laid pipes from the lower tank to cattle sheds on property A. for the purpose of supplying them with water, & they were so supplied till 1863, when the owner sold property A. to pltf., with all waters, watercourses, etc., to the same hereditaments & premises belonging or appertaining, or held, used, enjoyed, or reputed as part thereof, or as appurtenant thereto. Pltf. had the use of the water after his conveyance, until deft., a subsequent purchaser of property B., stopped it:—Held: (1) the watercourse was a continuous easement necessary for the use of property A., & would have passed by implication; that pltf. was entitled to the use of the water on the conveyance of that property without any words of grant; supposing it only convenient & not necessary, the general words were sufficient to pass it; (2) the right was to have the accustomed flow of water through the pipes, without regard to the purpose for which pltf. used it; the right, therefore, was not lost by his erecting cottages instead of cattle sheds.

(3) Semle: if the owner of a house & land makes a formed road over the land for the apparent use of the house, & conveys the house separately from the land, with the ordinary general words, a right of way over the road will pass.

(4) The conveyance to pltf. granted to him a right of way through the gateway of the vendor which opened into a close afterwards bought by deft., to a wicket-gate to be erected by pltf. at a given point into a piece of garden ground, part of the premises purchased by pltf. Pltf. built a cart-shed on this piece of garden ground close to the point where the wicket-gate was to be, & claimed a right of carriage-way to it:—Held: pltf. was not confined to a right of footway, but was entitled to a right of way for all purposes.—*WATTS v. 253. ————]—Light.—(1) On a grant of part of a tenement, or of one of two adjoining tenements belonging to the same grantor, no reservation of easements will be implied in favour of the grantor, except easements of necessity; but there will pass by implication to the grantee all continuous apparent easements, that is, all such easements as are necessary to the reasonable enjoyment of the property granted, & have in fact been enjoyed during the unity of ownership.

A workshop & an adjoining vacant piece of land belonged to S. The side of the workshop facing the piece of land had in it three windows, not ancient windows, which received their light from over the piece of land. S. put all the property up to auction in several lots under certain conditions, not providing for any reservation. He sold & conveyed the piece of land to pltf. without expressly reserving any right to light in respect of the windows, & shortly afterwards sold & conveyed the workshop to deft. under the same conditions. Pltf. claimed the right to build on the land so as to obstruct the windows, & deft. claimed the access of light to the windows from over pltf.'s land as an apparent continuous easement necessary for the enjoyment of his property. In an action to try the right:—Held: no right to light in respect of the windows was impliedly reserved to S. under the conveyance to pltf., it not being a case of necessity, & consequently the latter could build & obstruct the windows.

(2) On the grant by the owner of a tenement of part of that tenement as it is then used & enjoyed, there will pass to the grantee all those continuous & apparent easements, by which, of course, I

h. Grant of dominant tenement.—If the title to different parcels comes to ments in fact, quasi-easements. If the dominant tenement is first granted, all quasi-easements which have been enjoyed as appendant to it over a quasi-servient tenement retained by the grantor pass by implication.—ATTRILL v. PLATT (1883), 10 S. C. R. 425.—CAN.

256. ——— Intention to build—Support.]—(1) A conveyance of land to a railway co., for the purposes of the line, gives a right by implication to all reasonable subjacent & adjacent support connected with the subject-matter of the conveyance; & therefore, although, in the conveyance to the railway co., the minerals are reserved, the grantor is not entitled to work them, even under his own land, in any manner calculated to endanger the railway. On the same principle, if the owner of a house conveys the upper story, reserving all below, the purchaser will be entitled, on general principles, without stipulation, to prevent any damage to the walls underneath.

(2) But if a meadow is granted to A. for grazing purposes, the minerals & the adjacent land being retained, & if A., having no warranty against subsidence, thinks fit to build a house on the edge of the meadow, & the house falls, he is without remedy, & has himself alone to blame for the consequences. If, however, the grant were made expressly for building purposes, there would then be an implied warranty of support, both subjacent & adjacent.

(3) In the case of a grant to a railway co. for the purposes of the railway, if the line which divides the land granted from the land retained traverses a quarry, it may be that no adjacent support is necessary, & that the grantor may dig or remove the whole contiguous soil. But if the dividing line traverses a bog, or a bed of sand, it will be incumbent on the grantor to leave untouched such an intervening measure of lateral support as will prevent any part of the land granted from retreating.—CALEDONIAN RY. 261. ——— ————]*—(1) The maxim that a grantor shall not derogate does not entitle a grantee of a house to claim an easement of light to an extent inconsistent with the intention to be implied from the circumstances existing at the time of the grant & known to the grantee.

The cornp. of a town granted a lease to pltf. of a piece of land & a newly erected building "with the rights, members, & appurtenances to the premises belonging." The building abutted on a passage twenty feet wide, which the cornp. agreed to keep open, & on the other side of the passage were old buildings about 25 feet high. The cornp. demised the land on the other side of the passage to deft., who erected on the site of the old buildings a house eighty feet high, which materially interfered with pltf.'s light. The land on both sides of the passage was part of a larger piece of land laid out by the cornp. under a building scheme for the improvement of the town:—Held: (2) there was no grant, express or implied, in the lease to pltf. of a right to uninterrupted light to the new building; (2) the obligation on the cornp. not to obstruct pltf.'s light which was to be implied from the relation in which they had placed themselves to pltf. by granting them the lease, must be measured by the circumstances existing at the date of the lease & known to both parties; (4) having regard to the fact that pltf. knew that the land was being laid out for building, & had stipulated that there should be a passage twenty feet wide adjoining the new building, they had no right to complain of the obstruction caused by deft.'s house, & an injunction was refused.

Qu.: whether they would not have been entitled to an injunction if their light had been entirely destroyed.

(5) The rule that a man who grants a house with lights cannot erect new buildings so as to obstruct those lights, applies to the case where the grantor purposely leaves a strip of land intervening between the house & the lands retained.

(6) As to the words of this lease " & also together with all rights, members & appurtenances to the said premises belonging," the case under the Conveyancing Act would have been stronger if it had not been for them; for they point to an intention to convey with the house only such rights, if any, as belong to the premises (COTTON, L.J.).—BIRMINGHAM, DUDLEY & DISTRICT BANKING Co. v. 262. ——— ————]*—In 1875 W. conveyed land to the trustees of a religious body who were desirous of erecting a chapel thereon. The deed of conveyance set forth fully the trusts upon which the grantees were to hold the land, including trusts to erect a chapel in such manner as the grantees should, with the sanction of the religious body, deem necessary or expedient, & trusts in certain events to sell, let, or mtge. the land & buildings; the conveyance also contained a covenant by the grantees with W. that all windows in the chapel looking out on other land of W. should be of fluted or ground glass. There were no buildings upon the land at the date of the grant, & no plans or specifications of the proposed chapel were submitted to W. for his approval. In Feb. 1878, the grantees commenced to build a chapel having windows looking out upon the land retained by W. In Nov. 1878, W. entered into an agreement to sell this land; & it was shortly afterwards conveyed by him to defts., who in May, 1890, commenced to build thereon in such a manner as to obstruct the light of the chapel:—Held: (1) W. had, in effect, given permission to the trustees of the chapel to erect such a building as they thought fit, & the chapel having been erected in a reasonable manner, neither W. nor his assigns could complain of the position of the chapel or of the way in which it was lighted; (2) it having been within the contemplation of the parties to the conveyance of 1875 that a chapel would be built on the land conveyed, having windows looking out on the land retained by W., he & his assigns were under an implied obligation not to do anything to obstruct such windows.—BAILEY v. ICKE (1891), 64 L. T. 789.

263. ——— ————]—Having regard to the circumstances existing at the date of the lease & known to both parties:—Held: defts. had committed no breach of a covenant for quiet enjoyment by building on adjoining ground & so interfering with pltf.'s light & air.—ROBSON v. PALACE CHAMBERS, WESTMINSTER Co., LTD. (1897), 14 T. L. R. 56.

a right by way of easement to the access of air, except where such right is enjoyed through a definite aperture in the nature of a window on the property granted, or through a definite channel over adjoining property; but the grantor of land to be used for a particular purpose is under an obligation to abstain from doing anything on adjoining property belonging to him which would prevent the land granted from being used for the purpose for which the grant was made.

Where, therefore, a lease was granted in order that the land demised might be used by the lessee for the purpose of carrying on the business of a timber merchant, & the lessee covenanted to carry on such business:—Held: the assigns of the lessor were not entitled to build upon adjoining property acquired by them from him, so as to interrupt the access of air to sheds upon the demised property used for drying timber so as to interfere with the carrying on of the business in ordinary course.

(2) The lessee, after the date of the lease, with the lessor's permission, but at his own cost, constructed certain ventilators in the walls of a building demised by the lease. The lessee gave no consideration for such permission & no deed was executed giving him the right to use the ventilators. The ventilators were obstructed by buildings erected upon adjoining property by assigns of the lessor:—Held: the licence being revocable, the lessee was not entitled to an injunction; but, in the absence of reasonable notice of revocation, he was entitled to an inquiry as to damages in respect of the ventilators having been obstructed without such notice.—*ALDIN v. 265. — Way. — Deft. B. had granted to G. separate leases of four plots of land fronting on H. road, & four houses which had been erected thereon by G. under a building agreement. The plan on each lease which was made part of the description showed a row of twelve plots with houses thereon, fronting on H. road, including the house demised which alone was coloured, & a strip of land coloured brown running past the back of all the plots to E. road. The position of this strip on the plan suggested that it was intended to give access to the back of the plots, but there were no words on the plan expressing such an intention. This strip of land was included in the building agreement but not in the leases. The leases were executed in May, 1903, & then bore no date except the year 1903, but the dates July 27, 28, 29, & 30, 1904, respectively, were afterwards inserted by agreement between the parties. At the latter dates the houses had been completely erected & surrounded with a fence in which gates or openings had been made in the back fences giving access to & from the brown strip. This strip which belonged to B., had never been fenced or marked off from the rest of B.'s land. Pltf. was a mtgee. of G. who had entered into possession, & claimed a right of way over the brown strip:—Held: the alteration of the leases did not make them void, but B. was estopped from denying that the leases were executed at the dates inserted in them with his consent; the circumstances existing at those dates could be looked at in construing the lease & plan, & an implied right of way over the brown strip was granted by the leases to the lessee & those claiming under him.—RUDD v. BOWLES, [1912] 2 Ch. 60; 81 L. J. Ch. 277; 105 L. T. 864.

267. — Intention to use property for bleaching works. — S. demised certain premises to a tenant, who occupied them as bleach works. The works communicated with a stream by an artificial drain, partly covered, & partly open, through which the refuse from the bleaching process was discharged into the stream at intervals of about seven times a fortnight. An arrangement was entered into, by which deft. took the works, the former tenant surrendered his lease, & S. demised the premises to deft. by a lease containing a clause relating to improvements, which should be made by deft. "for the purpose of carrying on the business of bleaching":—Held: the demise implied a grant to deft. of a right to use the premises for the same purposes, & in the same manner, as they were used at the time of such demise; therefore no action would lie against deft. by pltf., to whom S. had afterwards conveyed a mill situated lower down the stream, for fouling the water, by discharging into it the refuse of the works, it being proved that the drain, by which such refuse was discharged, was in the same state, & used in the same manner, as at the time of the demise to deft.—*HALL v. 268. — Obstruction to light by hoarding. —

A mtgor. in possession of land, laid out for building, granted a building lease of part of the land to A., pursuant to Conveyancing Act, 1881 (c. 41), s. 18, & the mtgees. were not parties to it. The lease was granted in consideration of buildings recently erected on the demised land. Subsequently the mtgees. conveyed a part of the land, adjoining the houses, to B., who used it as a cricket ground, & erected on his boundary, adjoining the houses, a hoarding to prevent the cricket ground being overlooked by the occupiers of the houses. The hoarding caused a substantial diminution of light to the basement windows of the houses. On action by A. to restrain B. from permitting the hoarding to remain:—Held: (1) the mtgees. were bound by the lease as though they had been parties to it; (2) A. was entitled to an unobstructed access of light to his houses, subject only, if at all, to restriction from buildings to be erected on other parts of the land; (3) the hoarding was not a building, & must be removed.—*WILSON v. 269. Grant of support to railway—Effect of amalgamation of railways. — In 1835 L. railway co., constituted under an Act which excepted mines from land purchased, & allowed the landowners to work them, provided they did no damage to the railway, bought land for their railway. In 1836 Y. co. was constituted under an Act containing provisions as to mines similar to those of Railways Clauses Act, 1845 (c. 20). Afterwards Y. co. purchased L. railway under the powers of an Act of 1844, which provided, by sect. 4, that on completion of the purchase, L. Railway Act should be repealed, provided that the repeal should not affect anything done under the Act, but that all acts done under it should remain as valid as if there had been no repeal. Sect. 9 provided that all the provisions of Y. Railway Act, so far as they were not repealed, altered or otherwise provided for by the Act of 1844, or by any statute, should apply to L. railway:—Held: the provisions as to mines in Y. Railway Act were not, by the Act of 1844 made applicable to L. railway, so as to give the owners of the mines under the lands purchased by L. co. a right to work them to the injury of the railway, if Y. co. did not choose to purchase them, but that the unqualified right to support, which was incident to the grant of the lands for the purposes of the railway, remained unaffected.—*NORTH EASTERN RY. 270. Grant of support to tramway—Alteration of tramway to railway.—In 1830, under the powers of a special Act of 1825, land was conveyed to a tramway co. for the purpose of a horse tramway authorised by the Act, which reserved to the owner of land conveyed the subjacent mines, with power to work them, but not so as to injure the tramway. By a special Act of 1855 the tramway was vested in another co., thereby incorporated with power to alter the tramway into a railway of the modern type. That Act incorporated Railways Clauses Consolidation Acts, 1845 (c. 20), & repealed the Act of 1825, but without prejudice to anything done under it, & to all rights & liabilities which, if the repealing Act were not passed, would be incident to or consequent on anything so done. Under that Act of 1855 a line of railway suitable for locomotive engines & carriages was laid down & worked over the land comprised in the conveyance of 1830. In 1892 defts., the present owners of the subjacent mines, gave pltf.s., the present owners of the railway, notice under Railways Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845 (c. 20), s. 78, of their intention to work the mines, & on pltf.s. declining to pay compensation, proceeded to work the mines, & in so doing caused subsidences of the surface & railway. Thereupon pltf.s. brought an action for an injunction, claiming to be entitled, by virtue of the conveyance of 1830, to an easement or right of support, & to be under no liability to purchase the mines under Railways Clauses Consolidation Act:—Held: pltf.s. were entitled, under the conveyance, to a right of support from the subjacent mines without payment of compensation; such right had not been lost by the alteration of the old tramway into a railway; the Act of 1855 did not operate to alter the express contract entered into in 1830 by the predecessors of pltf.s. & defts.; pltf.s. were entitled to an injunction.—GREAT WESTERN RY. CO. v. CEFN CRIBBWR BRICK CO., [1894] 2 Ch. 157; 63 L. J. Ch. 500; 70 L. T. 279; 42 W. R. 493; 8 R. 178.

271. Grant by statutory company—Use of adjoining land for other than statutory purpose.—A railway co. sold a piece of their surplus land to pltf., together with a house, which they had allowed him to erect thereon. The house was close to their line of railway, which there ran over a series of arches, through two of which there was some access of light to two of the lower windows of pltf.'s house. The co. retained in their own hands lands on the other side of the railway opposite pltf.'s house; & their conveyance to him contained a recital that all the land acquired by them other than that sold to pltf. would be required by them for the construction of their railway, & it contained no express grant of right, or covenant as to light. Def't.'s predecessor in title afterwards acquired from the co., under a conveyance subject to any right of light which pltf. might have, the fee of the lands opposite pltf.'s house, & erected buildings thereon; & he also took a lease of the arches. Def't. subsequently acquired this property, & blocked up the openings of the two arches nearest pltf.'s house with hoardings:—Held: the co., on selling a portion of their surplus lands to pltf., had entered into an implied obligation not to do or permit anything on the land retained by them which would interfere with pltf.'s reasonable enjoyment of the land he purchased, except what was required for the construction of their railway; & the hoarding not being for that purpose, a mandatory injunction ought to be granted.—MYERS v. CATTERSON (1889), 43 Ch. D. 470; 59 L. J. Ch. 315; 62 L. T. 205; 38 W. R. 488; 6 T. L. R. 111, C. A.

272. Covenant by grantees to build according to approved plans.—Pltf.s. were lessees from defts. of a plot of land which at the date of the lease was partially covered with buildings & was occupied by defts., together with the adjoining property as business premises, & the lease contained a covenant by pltf.s. to build on the demised land a warehouse according to approved plans which showed that the back wall of the warehouse was to contain certain windows on the first floor overlooking defts.' premises. Defts., in pursuance of a collateral agreement to clear the demised land of buildings, demolished one end of a cart shed which stood partly on the demised land & partly on the land reserved by defts., but they left remaining certain stanchions & roof beams, which slightly projected over pltf.s.' boundary & which were eventually built into the back wall of the warehouse under a verbal agreement between pltf.'s architect & defts. The architect was employed to superintend the building of the warehouse in accordance with the approved plans, & the agreement was made without the express authority or knowledge of pltf.s. The wall was built entirely on the demised land. Subsequently pltf.s. were called upon by the local authority to block up the windows in the back wall on the ground that the building in of the stanchions & roof beams had converted it into a party wall. In an action for an injunction to restrain defts. from using this wall as a party wall:—Held: during the continuance of the lease pltf.s. were entitled by implied grant as against defts. to an unqualified right to the access of light coming through the windows in question; the agreement was beyond the scope of the architect's authority; the user of the wall by defts. as a party wall constituted a derogation from their grant & a trespass. Defts. were ordered to disconnect their buildings from the wall.—BETTS (FREDERICK) LTD. v. PICKFORDS, LTD., [1906] 2 Ch. 87; 75 L. J. Ch. 483; 94 L. T. 363; 54 W. R. 476; 22 T. L. R. 315.

275. — Reciprocal rights implied—Light.—(1) Occupier of one of two houses built nearly at the same time & purchased of the same proprietor, may maintain a special action on the case against the tenant of the other, for obstructing his window lights by adding to his own building, however short the previous period of enjoyment by pltf.

(2) This purchase must be taken to have been subject to certain conditions at the time of sale, & as these unfinished houses were at that time so far built, as that the openings which were intended to be supplied with windows were sufficiently visible as they then stood, we must recognise an implied condition that nothing would afterwards be done by which those windows might be obstructed. The purchasers must have taken subject to what then appeared. Now, without questioning whether this building were a dwelling house or not, it is sufficient for the purpose of maintaining this action, if the erecting of any building on the wall be the doing an act whereby pltf. has sustained a derogation of any right which he acquired by his purchase. If so, it is what the original owner could not have done, & all lessees claiming under him were equally bound by the transfer (THOMSON, C.B.).—COMPTON v. RICHARDS (1814), 1 Price, 27; 145 E. 1. — — — — —]—Where two properties of one owner are sold at the same time, a piece of ground built four cottages on it, leaving in the rear of the back gardens of the cottages a strip some ten to twelve feet wide enclosed between the garden wall & the hedge bounding the property & also closed at its upper end by a wall. The lower end was open to a highway & the strip extended along behind the four cottages, so that access could be obtained from the highway over the strip to the cottages through back doors in the back garden wall. The cottages were let until 1919 to various tenants who used the strip for obtaining access to the cottages by the back doors. The earth closets & cesspools were also emptied from the strip, & in the case of two cottages the only alternative mode of removing the contents was through the cottages in breach of the local bye-laws. On Jan. 2, 1919, the cottages were sold by auction to various persons, amongst whom were pltf. & some of defts. The evidence showed that at the sale the auctioneer announced that each house would have a back entrance. The cottages were conveyed to the respective purchasers on the same day, & in each a grant was made of the particular cottage "with the garden outbuildings & appurtenances," & included the part of the strip adjoining that cottage. Pltf., whose cottage adjoined the highway, brought this action for a declaration that defts. had no right of way over his part of the strip & an injunction accordingly. Although there was no made road over the strip, it was at the time of the sale worn & marked with rough tracks so as to make it apparent that the strip was used as a back approach to the cottages:—Held: (1) the right of way being de facto enjoyed by the tenants up to the date of the conveyances passed by way of express grant under the word "appurtenances"; (2) the right of way passed in any case under the words to be read into the conveyances under Conveyancing Act, 1881 (c. 41), s. 6 (2), as the use of one of these words, "appurtenances," did not suffice to exclude the others by showing a contrary intention within sect. 6, sub-sect. 4; (3) even if there were no express grant of the right of way, such grant ought to be & could be implied. It was immaterial that there was no formed road in existence at the date of the conveyances, as there were other indicia which made it apparent that the right was then being openly enjoyed.—HANSFORD v. JAGO, [1921] 1 Ch. 322; 90 L. J. Ch. 129; 125 L. T. 663; 65 Sol. Jo. 188.

Conveyances not simultaneous—Leases of adjoining properties—Right of second lessor on termination of first lease—Light.]—A., the owner of two adjoining houses, granted a lease of one to B., there then existing in it a certain window, for a term which expired at Michaelmas, 1875; & afterwards, in 1874, leased the other houses to C.

Semble: (1) during the currency of B.'s lease, C. could not build so as to interfere with the light coming to B.'s window; (2) on the expiration of B.'s lease, C. could build so as to interfere with the light coming to the window, as the lease to C. had been made by A. without any reservation of the right to light.—WARNER v. MCBRYDE (1877), 36 L. T. 360.

286. Easement for convenient use of land devised—Way.]—A., being a termor of land, built two houses on it. The whole was then released to him in fee, "with all ways, easements, advantages, & appurtenances thereunto belonging, or therewith usually used, leased, held, occupied or enjoyed." By his will he devised one house, & the appurtenances thereunto belonging, to B. & the other to C., in similar terms. During A.'s ownership of both, the entrance from the high road to the principal door of the house afterwards devised to B., was by a set out carriage drive or sweep entering from a high road, passing immediately in front of the house afterwards devised to C., to B.'s door, & then returning round an oval garden in front of C.'s house, but at a greater distance from it, to the same point of the entrance. B.'s house had a coach house opening only into the high road, & a back entrance into the same. After A.'s death, C. made a fence across the oval garden, leaving the further way to B.'s front door by the same carriage drive open. B. brought trespass claiming the way as appurtenant to his house & garden:—Held: (1) the way, as used in A.'s time, during the unity of ownership in him, immediately in front of C.'s house, did not pass to B. with the house devised to him, under the word appurtenances, in A.'s will; & (2) it did not pass as a way of necessity, whether taken in the strict sense, or as a way without which the most convenient & reasonable mode of enjoying every part of B.'s premises could not be had.

(3) Semble: nothing of absolute necessity to a building, e.g. a gutter in alieno solo, to carry off water, etc., is extinguished by unity of ownership.—PREYSEY v. VICARY (1847), 18 M. & W. 484; 8 L. T. O. S. 451; 153 E. R. 1280.

Where the owner of a farm divided it by his will into two portions, devising them to A. & B. respectively, & the portion of B. was landlocked, so that in order to reach it it was necessary that he should have a right of way over the property of A., & the deviser during his life had used a way in a certain direction over that property:—Held: a right to use that way passed to B. by the devise.—*PEARSON v. 288. ———.]—Testator, who died in 1832, devised several freehold houses in the City of London "with their appurtenances" to various devisees. They were adjoining houses & had been built by testator, each of them being partly a dwelling-house & partly a warehouse. They all communicated with a passage, a cul-de-sac, which ran along the backs of the premises into a side street, & had been constructed by testator for the convenience of the several houses, & had always been used in connection with them. Testator did not devise the passage or make an express grant of any rights of way over it to his devisees. Pltfs., who own the two houses abutting on to the passage at its open end, & defts.' predecessors in title, who owned the adjoining house higher up the passage, had for many years used the passage for loading & unloading vans for the purposes of their respective businesses. Pltfs. now sought to restrain defts., who had acquired, & built a railway station upon, the site of the last-mentioned house, from obstructing the passage by using & inviting their passengers to use it as a thoroughfare to or from their station:—Held: (1) a grant to the several devisees of a right of way contemplating such user as would be required for business as well as domestic purposes must be implied from the surrounding circumstances; (2) a railway station was not & could not have been in the contemplation of testator, & was, both in construction & mode of occupation something entirely different from any dwelling-house, warehouse, or even manufactory, that could have been erected on the land; (3) defts. having made it impossible that the passage should be used by them for the purposes for which it was designed, & for which it had in fact been used, their right was not, under the present circumstances, exercisable at all.

290. ———.]—Light.—The owner in fee of a house & an adjoining field over which the light required for the windows of the house passed devised the house to A. & the field to B.:—Held: the right to light over the field passed to the devisee of the house, & the devisee of the land had no right to obstruct the light.

If the owner of the house & field by deed, for value, grants the house but retains the field, it is settled law that a right to the light required for the enjoyment of the house passes to the grantee. . . . The conveyance operates as an implied grant of the light. Blocking of the windows by the grantor is regarded as an attempt on his part to derogate from his grant, a form of expression which assumes that the right to light has passed to the grantee (CHITTY, J.).—PHILLIPS v. LOW, [1892] 1 Ch. 47; 61 L. J. Ch. 44; 65 L. T. 552; 8 T. L. R. 23.

291. ———.]—Water supply.—Testator, who died in 1902, by his will made in 1898 devised Blackacre, of which he was then in occupation, & the appurtenances to pltf.'s predecessors in title, & Whiteacre & the appurtenances to the predecessor in title of the present owner, whose husband & gardener were defts. Blackacre was supplied with water by an underground pipe leading from a stone well at Greenacre, through Whiteacre. This pipe was openly laid by the testator in 1893, but there was no evidence as to what, if any, arrangement was made with the then owner of Greenacre. The supply was originally used for the house & garden of Blackacre, but after 1894 it was used for the garden only, though the house connection was still available. The well was fed by percolation from some untraceable spring, & the spring was practically continuous. The well had long since been covered by a stone slab & sods, & when the present owner of Greenacre bought in 1912 he was unaware of the existence of the well or the pipe, & was told there were no easements.

The present owner of Whiteacre purchased in 1913 without notice of the existence of the pipe or any easement. In 1914 a new carriage drive was made through Whiteacre, & the pipe being then discovered & found to be in the way, defts. as agents of the owner, who was abroad, cut & removed part of it & stopped the flow of water, whereupon pltf. brought an action for an injunction:—Held: (1) the effect of the will was to devise Blackacre with the right of passage of such water as might flow through the pipe, & to devise Whiteacre subject to that right; (2) the pipe easement, not being determinable at the will of the owner of the alleged servient tenement Whiteacre, was not precarious as between the owners of Blackacre & Whiteacre, & was therefore capable of creation by implied grant; (3) defts. were not entitled to rely on an alleged jus tertii in the owner of Greenacre to stop the water on the ground that the enjoyment against him had been "clam," & that his well was only being fed by percolating water; (4) the easement being one which depended not on implied covenant, but implied grant, the maxim that a grantor cannot derogate from his own grant applied, & the present owner of Whiteacre could not only therefore rely on the equitable defence of being a purchaser for value without notice; (5) the condition that the enjoyment must be nec vi, nec clam, nec precario, was a condition necessary to the acquisition of an easement by prescription, & had no reference to, & was in fact in the nature of things excluded, where the acquisition was by grant.—SCHWANN v. 293. Whether easement implied on escheat of estate of common owner.—To an action of trespass over close A., deft. pleaded that S., in his life, was possessed of close A. adjoining a highway as tenant of the manor of H. & of close B. adjoining ing close A., as tenant of the manor of T.; that during his life he had a way of necessity from the said highway over close A. to close B.; that on his death close A. escheated to the lord of H., & close B. to the lord of T., who, by virtue of the premises, from the death of S. & until the time when, etc., necessarily had, & still of right ought to have, the same necessary way over close A. from the said highway to close B., which had been had & used by S. during his lifetime:—Held: pltf. was entitled to judgment on such plea, non obstante veredicto; (1) because a right of way of necessity could only be created by grant, express or implied, & title by escheat was not equivalent to title by grant; (2) because, if even escheat were equivalent to grant, the plea did not allege that the lord of the manor of T. had no other way to close B. from the highway at the time when, etc., than that which S. had during his life.—*PROCTOR v. SECT. 3.—BY PRESCRIPTION.

SUB-SECT. 1.—IN GENERAL.

294. Presumption of legal origin.—HOWELL v. KING, No. 34, ante.

295. —.]—The general principle upon which a presumption should be allowed . . . is this, that that which has been done should be presumed to be rightly done. . . . Applying it to the question of a right of way. If we find the act has been often repeated (for the occasional use of a walk or path across a man's field would be hardly such a use as would establish the right), but if the act must necessarily have been often repeated with the knowledge of the persons acting upon an adverse right, it affords a strong presumption in favour of the right so exercised. The same principle is to be applied to presumptions in the case of light, or of flowing water. In each of these cases there must be a long continuance of enjoyment to warrant the presumption (ABBOTT, C.J.).—BARRLETT v. DOWNES (1825), 3 B. & C. 616; 1 C. & P. 522; 5 Dow. & Ry. K. 296. —.]—A custom which has existed from time immemorial without interruption within a certain place, & which is certain & reasonable in itself, obtains the force of a law, & is, in effect, the common law within that place to which it extends, though contrary to the general law of the realm. In the case of a custom, therefore, it is unnecessary to look out for its origin; but, in the case of prescription, which founds itself upon the presumption of a grant that has been lost by process of time, no prescription can have had a legal origin where no grant could have been made to support it (TINDAL, C.J.).—LOCKWOOD v. WOOD (1844), 6 Q. B. 50; 13 L. J. Q. B. 305; 3 L. T. O. S. 139; 8 Jur. 543; 115 E. R. 19, Ex. Ch.; subsequent proceedings (1845), 6 Q. B. 67, n.

m. Applicability of English law.—At the time of the passing of 9 Geo. IV. c. 83, the English law of prescription as to ancient lights was a law which could be applied in N.S.W. within the meaning of sect. 21 & therefore, became part of the law of that colony by virtue of that sect., even if it had not been brought with them to the colony by the first settlers.—DELOHERY v. PERMANENT TRUSTEE CO. OF NEW

297. —.]—We must bear in mind the cardinal rules of prescription, first, that no length of enjoyment can establish a title which could have no legal origin, as, for instance, of an estate or interest which the law does not recognise; & next, that "antiquity of time justifies all titles, & supposes the best beginning the law can give them." So that, if evidence be given, after long enjoyment of property to the exclusion of others, of such a character as to establish that it was dealt with as of right as a distinct & separate property, in a manner referable to a possible legal origin, it is presumed that the enjoyment in the manner long used was in pursuance of such an origin, which, in the absence of proof that it was modern, is deemed to have taken place beyond legal memory (WILLES, J.).—JOHNSON v. BARNES (1872), L. R. 7 C. P. 592; 41 L. J. C. P. 250; 27 L. T. 152; affd. (1873), L. R. 8 C. P. 527, Ex. Ch.

298. —.]—For more than forty years without interruption the owner of a house used a cart way from his stables through the yard of an adjoining inn to the public road, paying each year 15s. to the owners of the inn yard. There was no agreement in writing, & no conclusive evidence as to the origin of or the consideration for the payment:—Held: (1) the inference of fact drawn from the evidence was that the payment was made for leave to use the way; (2) there had been no enjoyment of right within Prescription Act, 1832 (c. 71), s. 2; & there was no ground for presuming a lost grant.

(3) The common law doctrine is that all prescription presupposes a grant. But if the grant is proved & its terms are known, prescription has no place (LORD LINDSEY).

(1) There is certainly no need to resort to the presumption of a lost grant when the facts of the case, so far as they are known, suggest a much simpler & a more natural explanation (LORD MACNAGHTON).—GARDNER v. HODGSON'S KINGSTON BREWERY CO., [1903] A. C. 229; 72 L. J. Ch. 558; 88 L. T. 698; 52 W. R. 17; 19 T. L. R. 458, H. L.

Pltfs. claimed to be entitled to an ancient ferry from point to point on the river Thames. The lands on both sides of the river shortly below pltf.'s ferry had been recently acquired for the public for purposes of recreation, & the lands on the north side had been laid out as a public park, & as a consequence the public resorted to this part of the river in large numbers. Defts., under a licence from the authority owning the park, moored a barge in the river adjoining the park within 600 yards of pltf.'s ferry, & for the convenience of the public visiting the park set up a ferry across the river between the barge & some steps on the opposite side. In an action for disturbance of ferry:—Held: defts.' ferry was not a disturbance of pltf's.

The acquisition of rights, as well by prescription at common law as by the presumption of lost grant, depends on the proof of long user or practice for which a legal origin will, if possible, be presumed, & which would have been unlawful without some such presumption (LORD PARKER).—HAMMERTON v. (3) Where, in consequence of erroneous statements as to the effect of a former grant & a recognition by the Crown, a reputation had arisen that a seigniory existed, contrary to the true facts, & an Act of Parliament was passed dealing with such seigniory as existing, & altering its tenure, & defining its extent by a schedule to be drawn up as therein provided:—Held: the Act & schedule were conclusive as to the existence of the seigniory & its boundaries.—LABRADOR CO. v. (3) The declaration for disturbance of the above-mentioned right of way alleged that pltf. was possessed of a certain wharf, close, & premises, & by reason thereof, ought to have had, & still of right ought to have, a certain way from this wharf, close & premises into, etc., as to the wharf & premises belonging & appertaining:—Held: the declaration was sufficient, & the way might be claimed as appurtenant to pltf.'s possession of the land at the time of the injury committed.

(4) If the way shall appear to have been enjoyed by claimant, not openly & in the manner that a person rightfully entitled would have used it, but by stealth as a trespasser would have done—if he shall have occasionally asked the permission of the occupier of the land—no title would be acquired, because it was not enjoyed, "as of right." 309. —.]—An easement, such as a right of way, cannot, under Prescription Act, 1832 (c. 71), s. 2, be acquired by a tenant by user over land occupied by another tenant under the same landlord, even if that user has existed for the period of forty years mentioned in the sect.

The point was early taken that this provision applied to a claim of the right to light under sect. 3 of the Act, but it was held that it did not, & that the access of light need not be enjoyed as of right, in order to confer a title to it under the Act. With regard to easements, such as a right of way, the reason why a prescriptive right of way cannot be acquired by user by one tenant over land in the occupation of another tenant of the same owner is that the enjoyment of the easement in that case would not be as of right (COLLINS, M.R.).

An easement can only be acquired by prescription at common law where the dominant & servient tenements respectively belong to different owners in fee, the essential nature of such an easement being that it is a right acquired by the owner in fee of the dominant tenement against the owner in fee of the servient tenement (MATHEW, L.J.).—KILGOUR v. 315. —.]—A. & B. occupied adjoining premises under C., their landlord, & B.'s premises were supplied with water by means of a pipe from A.'s premises. A. & B.'s premises were put up for sale by auction in different lots, it being made a condition that the premises were to be sold subject to rights of water & other easements subsisting thereon. A. & B. purchased at the sale the premises severally occupied by them:—Held: (1) B.'s supply of water from A.'s premises was not an easement which could be enforced against a purchaser, it being simply a licence from the landlord for B. thus to obtain water during his tenancy; (2) A. was, therefore, entitled to a decree for specific performance of his contract to purchase the premises occupied by him, without any reservation to B. of right of water.—RUSSELL v. HARFORD (1866), L. R. 2 Eq. 507; 15 L. T. 171; 14 W. R. 982.

316. —.]—By deed in 1791 A. obtained a demise from B. of an underground drain to be then constructed in B.'s land for the purpose of conducting water from A.'s mill so long as an annual rent of £2 2s. should be paid by A. to B. In 1836 the demise of 1791 was put an end to, & liberty was given to A., who was at that time yearly tenant from B. of the land through which the drain ran, to change the drain of 1791, & to substitute a new cut for conducting pure & clean water at the like rent of £2 2s. The new cut was made & used for pure water, & the old drain, as plff. alleged, continued to be used for foul water. In 1866 the land through which the drains ran was sold to C., & in 1867 A.'s yearly tenancy of the land was determined. In an action by A. in 1870 to restrain C. from interfering with his use of the old drain, to which he claimed title by prescription from alleged open & uninterrupted use & enjoyment thereof from 1836:—Held: until 1867 A. could not acquire an easement in the land of which he was yearly tenant, distinct from the use & enjoyment of such land, as against B., his landlord, & assuming the open & uninterrupted user from 1836 to have been proved, he had failed to establish any title by prescription as against C.—OUTRAM v. MAUDE (1881), 17 Ch. D. 391; 50 L. J. Ch. 783; 29 W. R. 818.

317. —.]—In July, 1852, plff. purchased & took a conveyance of the freehold of a piece of land on which he had, in the same year, built two houses. In Sept. 1892, defts., who had, in 1891, purchased a Crown lease, which had been granted in 1826 by the Comrs. of Woods & Forests under their statutory powers, of certain adjoining buildings for the residue of a term which would expire in 1914, surrendered the lease to the Crown upon the terms of an agreement with the Crown & the Comrs. that they, defts., should erect new buildings in place of the old, & that, on completion, the Comrs. should grant them a new lease. Defts. then proceeded to pull down the old buildings & erect new ones, which, plff. complained, would obstruct the ancient lights in his houses. No new lease had yet been granted to defts. under their agreement. In an action brought by plff. against defts. for an injunction to restrain them from obstructing his ancient lights, plff. contended that he had acquired an indefeasible right to light, not only as against defts. as lessees, but also as against the Crown as reversioners:—

Sect. 3.—By prescription: Sub-sects. 2, 3 & 4. A.]

Held: (1) Prescription Act, 1832 (c. 71), s. 2, did not apply to the easement of light; (2) sect. 3, which applied to light, did not bind the Crown; (3) under the circumstances no lost grant of light could be presumed as against the Crown or its lessees; (4) as plff. could not establish a right against the Crown as reversioner, he could not establish a right against the lessees, inasmuch as an easement, if acquired by prescription, either at common law or under the statute, must be absolute & not for a term of years.

The whole theory of prescription at common law is against presuming any grant or covenant not to interrupt, by or with any one except an owner in fee . . . An easement for a term of years may, of course, be created by grant; but such an easement cannot be gained by prescription, & not being capable of being so acquired, it does not fall within the scope of the Prescription Act, 1832 (c. 71) (LINDLEY, L.J.).—WHEATON v. 321. Right must be capable of legal origin.]—JOHNSON v. BARNES, No. 297, ante.

322. —.]—A prescriptive right to a several oyster fishery in a navigable tidal river was proved to have been exercised from time immemorial by a borough corpn. & its lessees, without any qualification except that the free inhabitants of ancient tenements in the borough had from time immemorial without interruption, & claiming as of right, exercised the privilege of dredging for oysters in the locus in quo from Feb. 2 to Easter Eve in each year, & of catching & carrying away same without stint for sale & otherwise. This

Held: (1) the claim of the inhabitants was not to a profit à prendre in alieno solo; (2) a lawful origin for the usage ought to be presumed if reasonably possible; (3) the presumption which ought to be drawn, as reasonable in law & probable in fact, was that the original grant to the corpn. was subject to a trust or condition in favour of the free inhabitants of ancient tenements in the borough in accordance with the usage.

(4) It is clear law that while you may by custom claim an easement to be enjoyed over the land of another, you cannot by custom claim a profit à prendre in alieno solo. . . . A fluctuating & uncertain body cannot claim a profit à prendre in alieno solo, & indeed cannot be the grantee of a several fishery or of any other kind of real property (LORD CAIRNS).

(5) The owner of the profit à prendre may take it in person or by his servants. But he may also, whether the profit is in gross or appendant to land, get the benefit of his profit à prendre, by selling or letting an interest in it, for a longer or shorter term, to any person capable of taking such an interest, & so long as that interest endures the donee has an irrevocable licence to take so much of the profit (LORD BLACKBURN).

(6) The law is . . . that prescription can only be of something which could have a lawful origin at common law (LORD BLACKBURN).—GOODMAN v. SALTASH CORPN. (1882), 7 App. Cas. 633; 52 L. J. Q. s. Right to appropriate water.]—

323. —.]—A district council discharged sewage from the town of E. in their district through a sewer made in 1874 by their predecessors; the outfall was in a tidal estuary below low-water mark. Pltf. held oyster beds upon the foreshore at E. by a possessory title acquired against the lord of the manor, who had had the foreshore, & a several fishery over it. These beds had been rendered unfit for the storage of oysters by the discharge from defts.' sewer. Since 1892 there had been an increase in the volume & changes in the quality as well as in the method of discharge, of the sewage. In an action commenced by pltf. in 1902 to recover damages against defts. for the pollution of his oyster beds:—Held: (1) pltf. had a right to maintain the action; (2) defts. had no prescriptive right to discharge sewage so as to contaminate the oyster beds, they having by their acts of commission since 1892 brought about such contamination; (3) defts., as a local authority had no common law right to discharge sewage into the sea so as to contaminate the oyster beds, & therefore, pltf. was entitled to damages.

It is an unquestionable principle of our law that, where there has been long-continued enjoyment of an exclusive character of a right of a property, the law presumes that such enjoyment is rightful, if the property or right is of such a nature that it can have a legal origin (FLETCHER-MOULTON, L.J.).—*FOSTER v. A. Nature of User.

326. Must be open.—(1) Pltf. was the owner of a house built on a hill having a descent towards the west. Next to pltf.'s house was one belonging to another person, which adjoined a house belonging to defts. For upwards of thirty years the three houses had been out of the perpendicular, leaning towards the west. There was no evidence how the leaning originated, but it might have been seen by any person passing in the street. It did not appear when the houses were built, or that there had been any connection between them either in title, possession, or occupation. The lease of defts.' house, which was the lowest or westernmost, having expired, & the house being out of repair, defts. agreed with one R. that R. should pull down the house & rebuild it, & that defts. would then grant R. a lease. R. pulled down defts.' house. The house adjoining sank further towards the west, & pltf.'s house, having lost its support, then fell down:—Held: defts.' house not adjoining pltf.'s house, pltf. had acquired no right to have his house supported by defts.' house.

An easement to appropriate the water of a stream in a particular way, as by a dam to turn the water in a particular direction, may be acquired by an exclusive enjoyment for twenty years; & where such right is once created it is perpetual, & passes with the inheritance.—*MCLAREN v. t. Licence to use drain.—A farmer consented to water, which came through a culvert, being carried off by means of a drain which he dug himself, across one corner of his farm. There was no agreement in writing, nor was there any expenditure of public money on the drain, & there was no consideration given for the use of the drain:—Held: there was only a licence to use the drain & such licence was revocable. The cause was a recurring one which would ripen into an easement by prescription if permitted to continue long enough to become such.—TAYLOR v. COLLINGWOOD (1905), 6 O. W. R. 261; 10 O. L. PART III. SECT. 3, SUB-SECT. 4.—A.

326 i. Must be open.—To establish a right of way the facts must show a bona fide user of the disputed way for some intelligent & definite purpose & for a period or at time clearly stated.—O'MARA v. EDEN (1892), 40 N. S. R. 172, n.—CAN.

326 ii. —.]—Where the evidence given on behalf of pltf. in an action for obstructing a right of way, showed an open & continuous user by pltf. & her husband extending over a period of 43 years:—Held: it was not incumbent upon pltf. to show affirmatively that deft. had notice.—BAKER v. ACADIA COAL CO., LTD. (1893), 25

326 iv. —.]—The enjoyment by pltf. of light & air through apertures in the wall of his house, when it is open & manifest, not furtive or invisible, & when it is not had in such wise as to involve the admission of any obstructive right in the owner of the servient tenement, is an enjoyment "as of right" within Act 15 1877, s. 26.—MATHURADA NANDVALAH v. BAI AMTHI (1883), 1 L. R. 7 Bom. 522.—IND.

326 v. —.]—If a person walks along the land of another for the beneficial enjoyment of other land, & if the enjoyment of the other's land does not amount to exclusive possession, there is no reason why his walking along the land without the permission of the true owner & in the assertion of a right to walk should not create in favour of the enjoyer a prescriptive right of easement, simply because, he mistakenly supposes that he is the owner of the land or asserts that his act of enjoyment is sufficient to give him the ownership by prescription. The mere claim of the higher right of ownership would not prevent a person from acquiring the lesser right of easement provided he could show that he asserted certain rights of enjoyment over the land in question for the benefit of another land belonging to him. Easements Act, s. 15, does not require that the title should be claimed as an easement, but only requires that the enjoyment should possess two properties, viz. (i) that it must be as of right without interruption & (ii) that it must be as an easement. The first quality is intended to show that enjoyment by license or under a contract which would not amount to a grant of an easement, would be effectual to create a right by prescription. The other quality is that the enjoyment should be as an easement, & not that it should be in the assertion of a claim of an easement.—KONDA v. RAMANAM (1912), 1 L. R. 38 Mad. 1.—IND.

326 vi. —.]—A farm solely in the occupation of the grandfather of both pltf. & deft. was afterwards divided by their fathers, who got one receipt from the landlord. There were subsequently judicial rents fixed on both holdings. Pltf. had a right of way by prescription through deft.'s yard, & in 1882 pltf. & deft. both made a raised cart-passage through the yard, which pltf. used without interruption until 1890:—Held: pltf. had a right of way over the raised passage.—MAHONY v. MAHONY (1897), 31 L. L. T. 100, 165.—IR.

326 vii. —.]—Where pltf. obtained a presentment under Grand Jury Act, s. 60, to close up a useless road, & had, after he obtained the presentment, incorporated one fork of the road with his own land, but had permitted deft., who had a private right of way over the road, to use the other part of it for ten years afterwards:—Held: deft. had acquired a private right of way over the road, & was not affected by the presentment obtained by pltf.—O'KEEFE v. DROMEY (1897), 32 L. L. T. 47.—IR.

326 viii. —.]—A negative servitude cannot be acquired by prescription, unless there has intervened some act by which the person claiming it has asserted it, & the opposing party has

330. —.—]—Pltf. & deft. were the occupiers of adjoining closes. A natural brook flowed through part of deft.'s land, & an artificial channel had at some remote period been cut through his land, by which the water of the brook was diverted so as to irrigate his fields, & afterwards returned to the brook. As far back as living memory went, the occupiers of pltf.'s land had been accustomed in the summer to go upon deft.'s land & place sods in the brook in the artificial channel, so as to turn the water down the channel & thence into a pit on pltf.'s land, where it was used for watering their cattle. In doing this they had never been interfered with, until the hindrance complained of in the action. In an action for preventing the water from flowing to pltf.'s land along the watercourse, the judge directed the jury that if the occupiers of pltf.'s land had at all times, as their need might require, at their will & pleasure & without interruption, exercised the right of turning the water from the brook into their own land, they would be justified in returning a verdict for pltf.—Held: this direction was correct, as such enjoyment & acts, which without the existence of the easement would be tortious, were evidence of the right to the water, & the fact of the channel along which the water flowed being artificial did not prevent the right being acquired, there being nothing to show that the artificial channel was made for a mere temporary purpose.—*BEESTON v. 332 iii. —.—]—Defts., being the holders of land situated below a tank, had, for a period of over twenty years, by means of a dam, raised the calingula of the tank higher than its crest level. The effect had been to collect an increased quantity of water in the tank, & from time to time, to throw it back on to pltf.'s lands, which were situated above the tank. Pltf.'s lands were thus submerged. On a suit brought by pltf. against defts., for an order that the dam placed by defts. on the calingula should be removed so that water should be stored in the tank only to the height of the crest level of the calingula.—Held: defts. had not exceeded the right which they had been proved to have acquired. Semle: notwithstanding that right, pltf. were entitled to take measures to save their lands from being submerged.—*NARAYANA REDDI v. aperture in a dwelling-house or a building occupied by human beings, or for the purposes of trade or otherwise, exists undoubtedly, because the right to have air coming to a window is not a thing which has been disputed or can be disputed. It appears to me that the right is not one which can be claimed by grant, because it is not a thing which is to be used by the grantee on the soil of the grantor. It is, therefore, not a subject of prescription, because prescription is the implication of a grant, but it has been put upon a covenant, that the law would imply, not to interrupt the free use of the air (FRY, J.).—*HALL v. For the grant of the prior incumbent will not bind the successor. But it may be used as evidence to show an ancient grant; yet even that cannot be, if the commencement of the first erection be shown, for that rebuts the presumption of antiquity.—WALL v. NIXON (1806), 3 Smith, K. B. 316.

342. —.]—The parish church of St. N., Arundel, regarded as one building, is a cruciform church with a central tower; the portion east of this tower is called the Fitzalan Chapel, & occupies the place commonly filled by the chancel. Pltf. claimed this portion of the building as his private property, & built a wall across the west end of it, so as to separate it structurally from the rest of the church. Deft. pulled down part of this wall, alleging that the chapel known as the Fitzalan

Chapel was the chancel of the parish church, & even if it were not, still that the parishioners were entitled either by prescription at common law, or by virtue of a lost grant, or under the Prescription Act, 1832 (c. 71), to light from this chapel. Evidence was given of numerous acts of exclusive ownership by pltf. & his ancestors for more than 300 years; documentary evidence of title to the same effect was produced:—Held: the evidence showed that the disputed building was not the chancel of the parish church, but had always been the property of pltf. & his predecessors in title, & the claim to light could not be maintained on any of the grounds set up by deft.

343. —.]—By an inclosure award in 1804 certain common lands were allotted to three adjoining owners, including the respective predecessors in title of pltf. H. & of deft.'s lessor, & a private carriage road was awarded to the same persons leading from a certain named point to deft.'s farm. The awarded road was never used or even set out, & part of the homestead & out-buildings of pltf.'s farm had stood for many years upon part of the admitted site of the awarded road. The evidence showed that, until the commencement of the dispute giving rise to this action, deft. & his predecessors in title or occupation had for a period extending so far back as living memory went, openly & uninterruptedly used a private road running across part of pltf.'s farm & in a direction parallel to the admitted course of the awarded road. There had been unity of possession of pltf.'s & deft.'s farms from 1889 to 1905. In an action by pltf. H. & his tenant for an injunction to restrain deft. from using the road in question:—Held: in the circumstances & on the evidence this was a case in which a lost grant of a right of way over the road in dispute ought to be presumed, & consequently the action failed.

Nor could he have succeeded upon a claim for prescription at common law because I consider it to be tolerably plain, for various reasons, that the existence of the right of way claimed, if it does exist, originated & commenced at a date long subsequent to the reign of King Richard I.—in fact, very little more than one hundred years ago. Deft., therefore, has to base his claim upon the existence of a grant not produced (JOYCE, J.).—

In an action for a declaration that no right of outspan existed over plaintiff's farm, the evidence showed that although for a period of thirty years some members of the public had used the outspan without hindrance, others had used it with the leave of the owner & upon payment:—Held: as proof of user nece vi, nec clam, nec precario for thirty years had failed, pltf.'s contention must be upheld.—DU TOIT v. DWYER (1879), 4 L. R. Ir. 271.—IR.

d. —Period runs from time when person in possession can prevent trespass.—Inasmuch as there can be no acquisition by prescription of a right of road unless there has been an adverse user, the period of prescription can only begin to run from the time when someone is in possession of the property who can prevent trespass.—*FARNI v. SUB-SECT. 5.—THE DOCTRINE OF A LOST MODERN GRANT.

A. Origin and Application of Doctrine.

345. Origin of doctrine.—The judges set their ingenuity to work, by fictions & presumptions, to atone for the supineness of the legislature, & to amend, so far as in them lay, the law, which I cannot but think they were bound to administer as they found it. They first laid down the somewhat startling rule that from the usage of a lifetime the presumption arose that a similar usage had existed from a remote antiquity. Next, as it could not but happen that, in the case of many private rights, especially in that of easements, which had a more recent origin, such a presumption was impossible, judicial astuteness to support possession & enjoyment, which the law ought to have invested with the character of rights, had recourse to the questionable theory of lost grants. Juries were first told that from user, during living memory, or even during twenty years, they might presume a lost grant or deed; next, they were recommended to make such presumption; & lastly, as the final consummation of judicial legislation, it was held that a jury should be told, not only that they might, but also that they were bound to presume the existence of such a lost grant, although neither judge nor jury, nor any one else, had the shadow of a belief that any such instrument had ever really existed. In this manner the cts. have endeavoured to supply the deficiency of the law in the matter of rights acquired by possession & enjoyment (COCKBURN, C.J.).—BRYANT v. FOOT (1867), L. R. 2 Q. B. 161; 7 B. & S. 725; 36 L. J. Q. B. 65; 16 L. T. 55; 31 J. P. 229; 15 W. R. 421; affd. (1868), L. R. 3 Q. B. 497, Ex. Ch.

348. Reason for presumption.—(1) Injunction to restrain obstruction of ancient lights refused, the nature of the alleged injury not requiring preventive interposition before a trial at law, & the legal right being doubtful.

(2) The presumption of a right, from twenty years' undisturbed enjoyment of light, is excluded by the custom of London.

(3) The ct. presumes a grant in ordinary cases, because they presume, that the party would not have abstained, from exercising his right of interference, knowing, that twenty years' abstinence would extinguish it, unless he intended to permit the enjoyment (PLUMER, M.R.).—*WYNSTANLEY v. 349. Application of doctrine—Ancillary to common law prescription.—(1) The access of air to the chimneys of a building cannot, as against the occupier of neighbouring land, be claimed either as a natural right of property, or as an easement by prescription from the time of legal memory, or by a lost grant, or under Prescription Act, 1832 (c. 71).

Pltf. & defts. were occupiers of adjoining houses. For more than twenty years the occupiers of pltf.'s house had enjoyed the access of air to the chimneys of it. Defts. took down their house, & rebuilt a wall to a greater height, thereby causing pltf.'s chimneys to smoke:—Held: no action was maintainable by pltf. against defts., either on the ground that pltf. had acquired an easement which def. had interfered with, or on the ground that the nuisance complained of had been created by defts.

(2) The expedient of a lost grant is only applicable to cases where something prevents the application of the common law prescription; we do not say there might not be an express grant or covenant not to interfere with the passage of air over neighbouring property, which could be enforced against the grantor or covenantor, & even against his assigns with notice; whether it could against the assigns without notice it is not necessary to say. But the lost grant doctrine is

363. Servient owner must have power of resisting user.—Before the year 1705 a co. of adventurers had begun to construct a sough, now called the Cromford Sough, for the purpose of draining a portion of the mineral field in the wapentake of Wirksworth, in Derbyshire, being remunerated by agreement with the proprietors of the mines, by a portion of the lead ore raised within the district benefited thereby, technically called the title of the sough. The water from this sough flowed into a brook called Bonsall Brook, & their united waters turned an ancient corn-mill. In 1738 they leased this easement, of continuing & maintaining the sough, to certain parties for 999 years. In 1771 A. obtained a lease for 84 years, from the owner of the land through which the sough was made, of the brook, of the stream of water issuing from the sough into it, & of the piece of land on which the corn-mill stood, with the right of erecting mills thereon; & accordingly, in 1772, erected extensive cotton-mills thereon, partly on the site of the ancient corn-mill, & they were worked by the same junction of the two streams. This lease contained a proviso, that if, during the term, the stream issuing from Cromford Sough should, by the bringing up of any other sough, or by unavoidable accident, be taken away or lessened, so that there should not come to the mills sufficient water for working them, & the lessor should not be able otherwise to supply it, it should be lawful for A. to take down the mills, & remove them to another piece of ground therein described, of which a lease should be granted for the rest of the term. In 1789, A. purchased from the lessor the absolute interest in the land leased, & in that through which so much of the sough was made as lay within the manor of Cromford. In the meantime, another co. had, in 1771, commenced the construction of another sough on a lower level, called the Meer Brook Sough, commencing within the manor of Wirksworth, for the purpose of draining a larger portion of the mineral field, under a similar licence from the same mine-owners who had before used the Cromford Sough. In 1836, Meer Brook Sough having been so far extended into Cromford as to drain the Cromford Sough, the water supplying A.'s mills was thereby diverted:—Held: under the circumstances, A. had not acquired, by his user of the water issuing from Cromford Sough, such a right to it as to entitle him to maintain an action against the proprietors of the Meer Brook Sough, this being an artificial watercourse made for a particular & temporary purpose, & its water having been originally taken by him with notice that it might be discontinued, & the circumstances not being such as to afford any presumption of a grant by the owners of the mines, & he did not acquire such right by force of Prescription Act, 1832 (c. 71), s. 2.

How can it be supposed that the mine-owners could have meant to burthen themselves with such a servitude, so destructive to their interests, & what is there to raise the inference of such an intention? The mine-owner could not bring any action against the person using the stream of water, so that the omission to bring an action could afford no argument in favour of the presumption of a grant; nor could he prevent the enjoyment of that stream of water by any act of his, except by at once making a sough at a lower level, & thus taking away the water entirely, a course so expensive & inconvenient, that it would be very unreasonable, & a very improper extension of the principle applied to the case of lights, to infer from the abstinence from such an act, an intention to grant the use of the water in perpetuity, as a matter of right (ABINGER, C.B.).—(*ARKWRIGHT v. 364. —The right to the passage of air is not a right to an easement within Prescription Act, 1832 (c. 71), s. 2. The presumption of a grant from long continued enjoyment only arises where the person against whom the right is claimed might have interrupted or prevented the exercise of the subject of the supposed grant:—Held: a grant of a right to the free & uninterrupted passage of the currents of wind & air to plff.'s mill from over the soil of another, cannot be presumed from an uninterrupted user of the mill for twenty years.—*WEBB v. 367. Effect of Prescription Act, 1832 (c. 71), s. 6.]—(1) Prescription Act, 1832 (c. 71), s. 1, relating to profits à prendre, applies only to cases where a man claims by custom, prescription, or grant, a profit or benefit from the land of another, & not to cases where a copyholder claims a right on his own tenement, according to the custom of the manor.

(2) Although, by sect. 6 of that Act, no presumption in favour of the claims is to be derived from a user short of thirty years the statute does not take from such shorter user its weight as collateral evidence of a grant.

(3) In a suit by a lord to restrain a copyholder from digging vitreous sand on his own tenement, evidence of a custom to dig vitreous sand for 27 years, & of a custom to dig sand generally for a long period, was adduced:—Held: the evidence of the custom was sufficient.

o. — ]—Prior to 1875, two holdings, of which M. was owner in fee, situate upon either side of a county road, were held together, & upon one of them there was a well. In 1875 the premises were divided. The part on one side of the road was let to G., who had since remained in possession & was a judicial tenant to M.; & the other part, containing the well, was retained by M. There was no agreement that G. was to be entitled to use the water of the well. There was a barn on G.'s part of the premises, which in 1878 was converted into a dwelling-house, & this house was at first occupied by P., a cottier tenant of G.,

& subsequently by deft., who had been nineteen years in occupation as cottier tenant. Since 1878 P., & deft. as his successor, had used the water of the well as of right, & had entered & walked over the portion of the land on which the well was for the purpose of approaching the well. In an action of trespass against deft., a cottier tenant of G., the acts of trespass being committed in assertion of deft.'s right to take water:—Held: it was impossible to presume a lost grant by M. to G., by reason of the user of the well for twenty years.—*MACNAGHTEN v. River above pltf.'s dam, & so forming the head-race to his mills, situate on his lands south of the highway & operated by water power from the river. Pltf. complained that deft. had, by partly blocking his raceway where it crossed the highway, interfered with the easement. The evidence carried the history & use of the easement only as far back as 1845, at which time the raceway & the highway were in the same plight & condition in which they stood down to 1905. There was no evidence to show the situation before 1845, nor the origin of either the raceway or the highway. The case-

376 i. What time sufficient—Way.]—Where parcels of land are held under a common landlord by tenancies, each of which has existed for upwards of twenty years, the jury, in an action for obstructing an easement of way, may infer, from twenty years' uninterrupted enjoyment, as of right, of an easement claimed by the owner of one of the tenements over the lands of the other tenement, a grant of such easement by deed from one tenant to the other. Where the tenancies have not been created by writing, & the user is proved to have existed as far back as the memory of the witnesses can reach, the jury may infer that the alleged dominant tenement, when originally demised by the landlord, was demised with the easement appurtenant. When open upon the pleadings the question should be so left to the jury, that if some of the jurors infer a deed & the others infer the creation of a tenancy, with the easement annexed as an appurtenant, the verdict should be for the owner of the alleged dominant tenement, though all the jurors do not agree upon the same alternative. The following questions having been, without objection as to their form, left to the jury, & answered in the affirmative, viz.—(a) did pl'tf. & her predecessors in title enjoy, as of right

& without interruption, the way, the subject-matter of the action, for forty years before action; (b) did the landlord, at the creation of def't.'s tenancy, reserve the right of way in favour of pl'tf.'s holding—the judge directed the verdict to be entered for the pl'tf.:—

376 ii. — —.]—A. & B. were tenants from year to year of a common landlord. A. sued B. for obstructing a right of way. At the trial the presiding judge, having explained to the jury the nature of evidence which would justify the presumption of a grant, & that, in his opinion, twenty years user would, in this case, authorise them so to presume, left to the jury the following questions, counsel not objecting:—(a) did pl'tf., for the twenty years next before this suit, enjoy, as of right & without interruption, the way claimed. Answer, Yes; (b) did he so enjoy it for the forty years next before this suit. Answer, No. On motion to set aside the judgment entered for pl'tf.:—Held: although as a general rule it is a more satisfactory course to leave the question of lost grant expressly to the jury, with appropriate directions from the judge, def't. was precluded, by the course adopted by him at the trial, & in the absence of specific objection & requisition, from relying, as ground for setting aside the verdict & judgment, upon the form in which the first question was left to the jury, & the judgment should therefore stand. Semble: there is no objection to presuming a lost grant of a right of way as between tenants from year to year of a common landlord upon sufficient proof of user.—O'KANE v. O'KANE (1892), L. R. 30 Ir. 489.—IR.

379 i. — Water.]—Prior to 1894, H. & P. were tenants of adjoining farms on the same estate. In 1861, H.'s predecessor for the better drainage of his holding constructed a drain through his lands to a river, & at the same time a weir was constructed on the course of the drain & a conduit by which some of the water was led in a different direction along H.'s side of the boundary between the two farms to the public road, & thence along that road, supplying a tank on P.'s holding & ultimately going to the river. In 1896 H. altered the drainage of his lands & removed the conduit so that it no longer supplied P.'s tank. P. entered H.'s land & restored it. H. sued for damages for trespass & for flooding of his lands:—Held: a lost grant of an easement may be presumed from an enjoyment for twenty years between two tenants whether holding under the same landlord or not.—*HANNA v. 384. ——— Way.—Where there is a tenant for life in possession of settled land, a lost grant of a right of way cannot be implied as against the reversioner merely from the user of the way during the lifetime of the tenant for life, one ground being that reversioner, not being in possession, would have no power to prevent the user, & the circumstance that the reversioner joined with the tenant for life in barring the entail, & in making a resettlement during the period of the user, does not alter the case.—*ROBERTS & LOVELL v. 385. Effect of acquiescence by tenant—On right of landlord—Light.—Where lights had been put out & enjoyed without interruption for above twenty years during the occupation of the opposite premises by a tenant, that will not conclude the landlord of such opposite premises, without evidence of his knowledge of the fact, which is the foundation of presuming a grant against him; & consequently, will not conclude a succeeding tenant, who was in possession under such landlord, from building up against such encroaching lights.—*DANIEL v. PART III. SECT. 3, SUB-SECT. 5.—E.

3871. General rule.—Where the right to an easement depends on the presumption of a lost grant, the presumption arises after the interrupted enjoyment of the easement for twenty years, & it cannot be rebutted by showing that in fact no such grant was made. But the presumption of a lost grant may be rebutted by showing that the grantor was under a legal incapacity to make the grant, & this incapacity extends not only to insufficiency of the amount of the grantor's estate, but also to incapacity by reason of the quality of that estate. THWAITES v. BRAHE (1895), 21 V. L. R. 192.—AUS.

SUB-SECT. 6.—UNDER PRESCRIPTION ACT, 1832, AND SIMILAR ACTS.

A. In General.

See Prescription Act, 1832 (c. 71).

388. Effect of Act.—To an action of trespass quare clausum fregit deft. pleaded a right of way across the locus in quo for the occupiers of B. field, on foot & with cattle & carriages enjoyed as of right & without interruption for twenty years before the commencement of the suit, under Prescription Act, 1832 (c. 71). The replication traversed so much of the alleged right of way as was claimed to be with carriages, & as to the residue of the plea, set forth (Trent Navigation Act, 23 Geo. 3, c. 48) under which the Trent Navigation Co., before the commencement of the twenty years, made a haling path for towing vessels along the river, across the locus in quo into B. field; that after the commencement of the twenty years, under the powers of the Dunham Bridge Act, 11 Geo. 4, c. lxvi., another haling path was set out nearer to the river, but also across the locus in quo & into B. field, & that thereupon the Navigation Co. abandoned the former haling path, which thenceforth ceased to be used as such; that before & at the commencement of the twenty years, the occupiers of the B. field used & enjoyed, as of right & without interruption, by virtue & under the first Act of Parliament, a way along the first mentioned haling path, across the locus in quo, on foot & with cattle, which right of way ceased & determined on the abandonment of that haling path; but that from that time until the commencement of the suit, the occupiers of B. field claiming right to the way, as a continuation of the right before enjoyed by them under the Act of Parliament, continued to use the same way; which way, & the use & enjoyment thereof along the haling path as aforesaid is the same way, & the same use & enjoyment thereof as in the plea mentioned except as to the user with carriages. On demurrer:—Held: the replication was good; it disclosed facts showing that deft.'s user, although as of right & without interruption during the twenty years, within Prescription Act, 1832 (c. 71), ss. 2 & 5, was not such as would, before that statute, have been sufficient to prove a claim by prescription or non-existing grant.

The Act does not alter the nature of the right necessary to give a legal title. The party who avers the right must mean such as could be inferred to exist by custom, prescription or non-existing grant (ALDERSON, B.).—KINLOCH v. NEVILLE (1840), 6 M. & W. 705; 10 L. J. Ex. 248; 151 E. R. 633.

389. ——— (1) In a suit to restrain deft. from building so as to obstruct pltf.'s ancient lights, it was proved that for a period of more than twenty years, extending to within a very short time before the bill was filed, there had been unity of possession of the properties of pltf. & deft., but there was no evidence of there ever having been any unity of title; & it was proved that before the unity of possession commenced the access of light to the windows had been enjoyed as far back as living memory went:—Held: pltf. had established his title to the access of light, by proof of enjoyment from time immemorial, independently of Prescription Act, 1832 (c. 71); for the statute does not take away any of the modes of claiming easements which existed before its passing; the fact that some of the windows had been considerably enlarged did not take away the right to an injunction; & pltf. ought not to be put upon the terms of restoring the windows to their former size.

(2) It is every day practice to plead enjoyment for twenty years before action, enjoyment for forty years before action, enjoyment from time immemorial, a lost grant, & it has always been understood that a right may be supported on the third ground, although it may be incapable of being supported under the first or second. There are no negative words in the statute to take away rights existing independently of it (MELLISH, L.J.).

(3) I am of opinion that this is a case for an injunction. I think that pltf. has proved his right to the ancient windows. Here are rooms in an inn which is used & enjoyed for the purposes of an inn, & deft. proposes to erect a building within five feet of them. Of course that would altogether obstruct the light coming to them. He proposes to build on a waste piece of ground, & pltf. has filed his bill before the building is even commenced. It is fortunate in this case that the building proposed to be erected is so near his house that pltf. is not in the difficulty in which pltf. often are, viz., as to its being doubtful whether the proposed building would obstruct the lights or not. Here it is so near that it is absolutely certain that it would obstruct the lights, & therefore, very properly, the pltf. filed his bill immediately. I cannot understand why the deft. is to be allowed to build upon a mere bit of waste land so as to block up the rooms of this public-house which are necessary for its enjoyment. It appears to me that this is properly a case for the ct. to interfere by injunction (MELLISH, L.J.).—AYNSLEY v. GLOVER (1875), 10 Ch. App. 283; 44 L. J. Ch. 523; 32 L. T. 345; 30 J. P. 484; 23 W. 395. —.]—Defts. were the owners of a house in London which adjoined a house owned by pltf. Both houses were about 200 years old & had been built together. The buildings in many respects might be regarded as one building divided by a partition wall, the front walls & the roof being continuous. The buildings were in fact built for the purpose of mutual support. Defts. decided to rebuild their premises, & accordingly served upon pltf. a party-wall notice under London Building Act, 1894, & each party appointed their respective surveyor to settle matters of differences between them. Defts.' house on being rebuilt was set back about thirteen feet from the original line of frontage in accordance with an agreement which defts. made with the London County Council. Defts. conveyed to the County Council the strip of land left vacant by the setting back of their premises, & the County Council dedicated the strip to the public. The flank wall of pltf.' premises, which was formerly the party wall, was, in consequence of defts.' premises being set back thirteen feet from the original line of frontage, left exposed for that distance, & pltf.' building, which had been supported by defts.' building, was rendered unsafe by the withdrawal of that support. Pltf. brought an action to recover damages at common law for the withdrawal of support afforded to pltf.' building by defts.' building which had been pulled down:—Held: an easement of support to buildings from buildings could be acquired under Prescription Act, 1832 (c. 71), as well as by grant, & pltf. had acquired such an easement by prescription against defts., but such rights were inconsistent with & were superseded by the rights which pltf. had as adjoining owners under London Building Act, 1894, & therefore pltf. could not maintain their claim for damages at common law.—*SELBY v. 398. Statutory company—Easement ultra vires statutory powers.—A co. incorporated by Act of Parliament for the purpose of making & maintaining a canal, & having powers under their Act to take water for the purpose of supplying the canal cannot by user acquire, under Prescription Act, 1831 (c. 71), s. 2, a prescriptive right to take the water for any other purpose.

An easement to take water to fill a canal ceases when the canal no longer exists.

A co. was incorporated for the purpose of making a canal, & empowered to supply the canal with water from certain rivers. In 1824 the co. made a cut & erected on it a water wheel for pumping water into the canal. The co. occasionally used the water wheel to drive a bone crushing mill. In 1853, 16 & 17 Vict. c. cxix., for converting the canal into a railway, reincorporated the co. for the purpose (inter alia) of making the railway. By sect. 10, it was enacted that easements, etc., vested in the canal co., should after the passing, etc., be vested in the co. thereby incorporated for their absolute benefit. The canal having been stopped up & converted into a railway:—Held: on the conversion of the canal into a railway the right of the co. to the flow of water in the cut for driving the wheel ceased, & the railway co. could not convey to a purchaser any right to such flow.—*NATIONAL GUARANTEED MANURE CO. v. (b) Nature of User.

i. In General.

Prescription at common law, see Sub-sect. 1, A., ante.

Under doctrine of lost modern grant, see Sub-sect. 5, D. (b), ante.

399. General rule—Continuity.—In an action where a right of way was claimed under the Prescription Act, 1832 (c. 71), in respect of twenty years' user as of right, it appeared that the way had only been used by the party claiming it, deft., for the removal of wood upon an adjoining close. The wood was cut upon this close at intervals of several years, the last cutting having been in the year before the action was commenced, the one next previous twelve years before, & the next at another interval of twelve years. Between these intervals the road was occasionally stopped up, but deft. used it as often as he wished while the wood was being cut:—Held: there had not been an uninterrupted enjoyment of the way for twenty years within the meaning of the above Act, which did not apply to so discontinuous an easement as that claimed.

It is sufficient for the present case to observe that the statute expressly requires actual enjoyment as of right for the full period of twenty years. No user can be sufficient which does not raise a reasonable inference of such a continuous enjoyment. Moreover, as the enjoyment which is pointed out by the statute is an enjoyment which is open as well as of right, it seems to follow that no actual user can be sufficient to satisfy the statute, unless during the whole of the statutory term, whether acts of user be proved in each year or not, the user is enough at any rate to carry to the mind of a reasonable person who is in possession of the servient tenement, the fact that a continuous right to enjoyment is being asserted, & ought to be resisted if such right is not recognised, & if resistance to it is intended (LINDLEY,

400. User must be known to servient owner—Support.—Two houses of pltf., one ancient, the other modern, stood on ground which had been, within twenty years, excavated by him for the purpose of getting coal. The owner of the adjoining land having worked underground to his own boundary, pltf.'s houses sank in consequence, & an action was brought for the injury:—Held: (1) as neither of the houses had stood on excavated ground, or been supported in part by deft.'s land for twenty years before the injury complained of, a grant by deft. of a right to such support could not be presumed, & pltf. had no remedy for the damage done.

(2) The existence of the excavation below the ancient house was unknown to both parties. Semble: as 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 71, s. 2, requires that easements, to become absolute, must have been enjoyed for twenty years under a claim of right, pltf., under the above circumstances, would not be entitled to the support of the adjoining land, even though, such an excavation had existed for twenty years.—*PARTRIDGE v. This effluent contained borax in solution. Pltf. utilised part of the area under their control for a sewage farm on which various crops were raised, & they alleged that this noxious effluent had injuriously affected their farm & the crops thereon. There was evidence that the discharge from defts.' works was intermittent, & as a rule made at night, & neither pltf. nor their predecessors had notice of it. No perceptible damage to the crops on the farm had been noticed prior to 1908. Defts. claimed a prescriptive right to continue the discharge of their effluent & denied that it was noxious or caused any injury to the farm. In an action by pltf. claiming an injunction to restrain the defts. from continuing the discharge of this noxious chemical solution:—Held: as the enjoyment of the alleged easement had been secret & unknown & unsuspected by pltf. or their predecessors, it was not of such a character as would establish a prescriptive right.—*LIVERPOOL CORPN. v. 407. General rule.]—(1) The words "enjoyed by any person claiming right," applied to easements, in Prescription Act, 1832 (c. 71), s. 2, & "enjoyment thereof as of right," in sect. 5 of the above Act, mean an enjoyment had, not secretly or by stealth, or by tacit sufferance, or by permission asked from time to time, on each occasion, or on many, but an enjoyment had openly, notoriously, without particular leave at the time, by a person claiming to use, without danger of being treated as a trespasser, as a matter of right, whether the right so claimed shall be strictly legal, as by prescription & adverse user, or by deed, or shall have been merely lawful so far as to excuse a trespass.

railway.]—(1) Trespass for breaking & entering, on Jan. 1, 1830, & on divers other days & times, etc., one close, called the Railroad, & one other close formerly used as a railroad, etc. Pleas, amongst others, that A., B., & C. were owners of the closes on each side of the locus in quo, which was a railway made by pl'tfs. under the authority of an Act of Parliament; that the adjoining closes contained minerals, & that, according to the custom of the country, the minerals could only be conveniently conveyed by means of a railroad across the locus in quo. The plea then justified the trespasses for that purpose, & for the convenient & necessary occupation of the adjoining closes. Replication, protesting the soil & freehold, de injuria absque residuo causae. Another plea alleged that the occupiers of the adjoining closes had, for twenty years, as of right, & without interruption used & been accustomed to use the privilege & easement of passing & repassing, etc., & laying down railroads across pl'tf.'s railroad. Replication to this plea, traversing the claim of right. New assignment of other & different purposes, to which there was judgment by default. The particulars complained of trespasses committed by defts. in Apr. & May, 1830, in a close "which now is or heretofore was a rail or tramroad," & destroying the plates of same, & laying down others. The evidence was, that defts., in Feb. 1829, took up some of the plates of pl'tfs.' railway, & altered the course of part of it, carrying it over their own land, & made a transverse railroad, which crossed the site of the old railroad, & also the new railroad:—Held: the particulars were sufficient.

(2) Upon the issue with regard to the more convenient occupation of the adjoining closes, there was much evidence on both sides, pl'tfs. giving evidence to show, that, in constructing the transverse railroad, defts. had an ulterior object in view. The judge left it to the jury to say whether the transverse railroad was constructed bonâ fide for the more convenient occupation of the closes, or for some other object:—Held: this direction was right.

(3) Upon the issue with regard to the twenty years' enjoyment of the easement:—Held: defts. were bound to show an uninterrupted enjoyment, as of right, during that period, & pl'tfs. might prove, under that issue, applications by defts. during the twenty years for leave to cross their railroad, & it was not necessary for them to reply such licence specially under Prescription Act, 1832 (c. 71), s. 8.—MONMOUTH CANAL CO. v. In 1896 H. altered the drainage of his lands & removed the conduit so that it no longer supplied P.'s tank. P. entered H.'s land & restored it. H. sued for damages for trespass & for flooding of his lands:—Held: the drain was merely an artificial drain & not permanent, but open to alteration that the way in question was used for forty years as of right, by the occupier, etc., of the farm. On a replication traversing the use as of right:—Held: plff. might give in evidence, under Prescription Act, 1832 (c. 71), s. 5, that the way had been used by leave & licence, & that an acknowledgment had been given by those to whom the use of such way had been allowed.—*BEASLEY v. 413. Evidence that user not of right — Watercourse.]—Case for disturbing a watercourse which of right ought to flow into plff.'s close to irrigate it. Plea: denial of the right. On the trial it appeared that the watercourse was not ancient, but that the water had flowed in its present course for more than twenty years, past plff.'s close. There was evidence that during that period plff., & those under whom he claimed, had been constantly in the habit of drawing off the water to irrigate his close, & that the owners of the watercourse resisted it. On one occasion, when plff.'s servant drew off the water, he was summoned before a justice for so doing. Plff.'s son by his direction attended & defended the servant, & paid a fine of 1s. The conviction was under a local Act, from which there was a power of appeal. Plff. did not appeal. The conviction was tendered in evidence & rejected. In summing up, the judge explained that the enjoyment to defeat an adverse right must be for twenty years, without interruption acquiesced in for a year. One of the jury asked what would be the effect in law of a state of perpetual warfare between the parties, which question the judge did not answer. The jury found that "the watercourse had been enjoyed as of right for twenty years, & without interruption for a year," & were directed to find for plff. — Held: (1) the evidence was improperly rejected, as the conviction, unappealed against, was, under the circumstances, evidence of an acknowledgment by plff., that the usage, to draw off the water for irrigation, was not as of right; (2) interruptions, though not acquiesced in for a year, might show that the enjoyment never was of right, but contentious throughout, though, if once the enjoyment as of right had begun, no interruption for less than a year could defeat it; (3) a new trial was granted.—*EATON v. By a deed made in 1864, A. covenanted with B. that A. would on three months' notice macadamise the street & keep it in repair. This deed was recited in another deed made between A. & B. in 1877, in which the proposed street was referred to. The street was never made, & the design had been abandoned:—Held: A.'s enjoyment of support from the wall was not as of right, & no easement was acquired.—TONE v. PUESTON (1883), 24 Ch. 416. Enjoyment under mutual mistake of legal right—Watercourse.]—Defts. in 1834 demised to plffs. the coal under the O. estate for fifty years, with powers to sink pits, make soughs, etc., erect engines, & make drains, etc., for supplying such engines with water, & also to do certain other acts on the surface for the better draining & working the demised mines & any other mines of which plffs. might become lessees under the lands of any other persons. In 1836 plffs. took a lease for 35 years of the O. Colliery from a neighbouring landowner. In 1846 plffs. made a drain about a mile long, chiefly on the O. estate, by which they diverted a small natural stream on the O. estate & brought it down to the O. Colliery, where they made reservoirs for the water at considerable expense. They did not ask leave to make the drain, but defts.' agent saw the work going on & encouraged it. In 1872 plffs. became owners in fee of the O. Colliery. In 1884, when the lease from defts. expired, defts. stopped the drain & diverted the water. Plffs., claiming a right by prescription to the water, commenced this action to restrain them from doing so: Held: if the making the drain was not authorised by the lease, as to which the ct. gave no opinion, it was made & enjoyed, either under the belief of both parties that it was authorised by the lease, or under a comity between landlord & tenant, & there was no enjoyment as of right so as to give the tenant a right to the water after the lease had expired.—*CHAMBER COLLIERY CO. v. Sect. 3.—By prescription: Sub-sect. 6, C. (b) iii. & (c) i.]

1832 (c. 71), the enjoyment of an easement as of right, for twenty years next before the commencement of the suit, means a continuous enjoyment for twenty years next before the commencement of the suit, as of right, of the easement, without an interruption acquiesced in for a year. If, therefore, during any part of the twenty years there is unity of possession, the enjoyment is defeated.

(2) It is not necessary, under sect. 5, that such unity of possession should be specially pleaded.

(3) Proof of unity of possession may be given in evidence under a traverse of the plea.—ONLEY v. GARDINER (1838), 4 M. & W. 496; 1 Horn & H. 381; 150 E. R. 1525; sub nom. OLNEY v. GARDINER, 8 L. J. Ex. 102.

In 1832, M. permitted deft. to occupy one of the houses without payment of rent, & he was accustomed to pass over the yard of the other house, which was let from time to time to different tenants, to a public highway. M. continued owner of both houses until his death in Dec. 1838. In Aug. 1839, the trustees under his will conveyed the last-mentioned house & the ground behind it to a person through whom pltf. derived his title. In Sept. 1839, the trustees conveyed the other house & ground to deft., who continued to occupy it, & use the way across pltf.'s yard without interruption until the year 1853:—Held: there was no user of the way "as of right" for twenty years, within the meaning of Prescription Act, 1832 (c. 71), s. 2.—WINSHIP v. HUDSPETH (1854), 10 Exch. 5; 2 C. L. R. 1042; 23 L. J. Ex. 268; 23 L. T. O. S. 162; 2 W. R. 523; 156 E. R. 332.

421. ———. —[—]—(1) The enjoyment of an easement as of right, for twenty, or forty, years next before the commencement of the suit, within Prescription Act, 1832 (c. 71), means a continuous enjoyment as of right, for twenty, or forty, years next before the commencement of the suit, of the easement as an easement, without interruption acquiesced in for a year; & such right is defeated by unity of possession during all or part of the period of enjoyment, though such unity of possession has its inception after the completion of the twenty, or forty, years.

Therefore, where pltf. had enjoyed a way as of right, & without interruption, from 1880 to 1855, when the action was brought:—Held: his claim under the above statute was defeated by a unity of possession from 1843 to 1853.

(2) In an action by a reversioner for the removal of the caves from his house, & the erection of a building with eaves & a gutter overhanging his wall, evidence of diminution of the saleable value of pltf.'s premises in consequence of the nuisance

It appeared that A. was tenant of Whiteacre from 1860, & of Blackacre from 1877 till 1898:—Held: (1) the unity of possession of the alleged servient & dominant tenements for the greater part of the forty years preceding the action was fatal to deft.'s claim under the Act; (2) in the circumstances the user of the right of way for the last forty years would be no evidence of right as against pltf.s.—*DAMPER v. Replication, denying the rights claimed. It appeared that within forty years B. had been lessee of the mill under one landlord, & of the land under another:—Held: (1) this was such a unity of possession as prevented his having an easement on the land; (2) this unity of possession need not be specially replied, & with a special replication the lease of the land to B. & letters written by B. while lessee of the mill, & before he became lessee of the land, were receivable in evidence; (3) B.'s lease of the land having expired more than thirty years ago, the acts of the occupiers of the mill in repairing the banks ever since that time, without any leave asked by them, or any notice from the other side of any adverse claim, must be taken to be done as of right.—*CLAY v. right of water from 1818. In 1836, C., who was entitled to the reversion expectant on T.'s lease, appointed Whiteacre to K. for life, from the expiration of that lease, retaining Blackacre. for the mill as enjoyed by S. In an action for the diversion of the water, commenced in 1860, there was evidence of uninterrupted enjoyment from 1818 to 1860:—Held: (1) as, during the lease of 1775, there was a unity of possession in T., the enjoyment by S., his tenant, pending that lease, was not an enjoyment "as of right," within the meaning of the Prescription Act. (2) The user for more than twenty years, since 1840, conferred no title to the easement, under Prescription Act, Sect. 2, the reversion of the servient tenement, during that period, being vested in K., the tenant for life.—*WILSON v. In pleading the enjoyment of such a right for forty years, it is correct to state it "for the full period of forty years next before the commencement of the suit."

431. ———.]—In case, the declaration stated, that plff. was lawfully possessed of a mill, & by reason thereof of right ought to have & enjoy the benefit of the water of a watercourse which ran & flowed, by means of a weir therein erected a little above plff.'s mill, being kept at a certain height, unto the mill of plff., for supplying it with water for the working thereof; & complained, that deft. wrongfully pulled down the weir, & placed & kept it at a lower height than it ought to have been. Deft. pleaded, that, before & at the times when he was the occupier of a certain close adjoining to the watercourse, & that he & all others the occupiers for the time being of the close for twenty years next before the commencement of the suit, enjoyed, as of right & without interruption, the right of from time to time, as occasion required, removing a part of the weir, & placing & keeping it at a lower height than the rest, to such an extent & for such a time as was necessary for diverting enough of the water to irrigate the close; that, at the times when irrigation was necessary for the close, wherefore deft. removed the part of the weir, & placed & kept it at such lower height, to such an extent & for such time as, & no more or longer than, was necessary for diverting the water for the irrigation of the close:—Held: this plea was good, & it was not an argumentative traverse of the right alleged in the declaration, inasmuch as it set up a right which, under Prescription Act, 1832 (c. 71), was not complete until the commencement of the suit, & therefore, was not inconsistent with plff.'s right to have the weir at a greater height at the time of the act complained of.—WARD v. A thirty years' user of the way for the purpose of getting water, was proved by plff., but deft.'s farm was held under a lease for life from the Archbishop of York, & on the part of deft. it was contended that that circumstance defeated the evidence of user. Motion to enter the verdict for deft., on the ground that twenty years' user gave no right against the Archbishop, & that no title at all was gained by an user which did not give a valid title against all:—Held: the rule would be refused.—SMITH v. IDESON (1848), 11 L. T. O. S. 104.

437. ———.]—Upon a traverse of the right of way in an action for obstruction, plff. proved enjoyment for twenty years; but during certain portions of the twenty years the servient tenement was held under leases for years exceeding three years. The user, however, commenced antecedently to the granting of any of the leases, & no proceedings were taken by the reversioner within three years after the determination of such terms, to resist plff.'s claim:—Held: (1) there was evidence for the jury of the right claimed, & Prescription Act, 1832 (c. 71), s. 8, applied only to cases where an enjoyment for forty years was relied upon as giving an absolute & indefeasible right, & not to cases where twenty years' user only was set up; (2) if sect. 8 of the above Act could be applied to the latter case at all, the condition imposed by that sect., of resistance within three years after the determination of the term, was applicable also; (3) there was no ground for excluding from the computation of twenty years the periods during which the servient tenement was out on lease.—PAIK v. SHINNER (1852), 18 Q. B. 568; 22 L. J. Q. B. 27; 19 L. T. O. S. 228; 17 Jur. 372; 118 E. R. 215.

To establish the easement by prescription it is not necessary to show that the present owner was in undisturbed possession for the full twenty years; at the undisturbed possession of his predecessors in title may be invoked in order to complete the term of prescription.—*McGEE v. By his statement of defence deft. set up a forty years' uninterrupted user & enjoyment of the locus in quo by himself & his predecessors in title for the purposes complained of, & denied that plff. was, or ever had been, in possession of the locus in quo "save subject to the right of deft." The judge decided that the words "person entitled to any reversion" in Prescription Act, 1832 (c. 71), included a person entitled as a remainderman; that plff. being in possession of the locus in quo under the agreement at least as tenant at will to the reversioner, was also a person "entitled to any reversion" within the sect., & could, therefore, maintain the action. On appeal:—Held: (1) on the true construction of the building agreement plff. had no estate whatever in the locus in quo, but only a right of entry thereon for the purposes of that agreement, & therefore, could not maintain the action; (2) it was, therefore, unnecessary to decide the question raised on sect. 8 of the above Act; but the Ct. of Appeal intimated that it must not be concluded that they agreed with the decision of the ct. below on that point.—*JAIRD v. 448. Must be adverse obstruction—Question for jury.]—(1) The "interruption" which defeats a prescriptive right under Prescription Act, 1832 (c. 71), is an adverse obstruction, not a mere discontinuance of user by claimant himself.

(2) In a case under sect. 1 if proof be given of a right enjoyed at the time of action brought, & thirty years before, but disused during any part of the intermediate time, it is always a question for the jury whether, at that time, the right had ceased or was still substantially enjoyed. The inference to be drawn from the facts proved, on this point, is not a "presumption" within sect. 6.

452. — Support for canal.]—By a private Act of Geo. 2, the undertakers, who were not made a corp., were authorised to make an existing brook navigable, & to maintain & use such navigation, & to make such new cuts & canals as might be necessary for the purpose, the undertakers first giving satisfaction to the owners of lands which should be made use of, or prejudiced, or damaged, by the carrying on, effecting, or preserving the navigation; which satisfaction might be by a yearly payment or by a sum in gross. The undertakers were authorised to charge tolls for the use of the navigation, & the public were to have a right to use it on payment of the tolls. No express power to purchase land was given, but persons under disability were empowered to sell. The Act contained no reference to minerals. The brook was made into a canal, but no conveyances to the undertakers were made—compensation being made to landowners by annual payments. The navigation subsequently became vested in ptfs. Dftfs., who were owners of coal under the canal, worked it so as to cause a subsidence, & ptfs. brought their action for an injunction on the ground that they had a right to support:—Held: where an express statutory right is given to make & maintain something requiring support, the statute, in the absence of a controlling context, must be taken to mean that the right of support shall accompany the right to make & maintain; if the Act does not provide any means of obtaining compensation for the loss occasioned to the landowner by his having to leave support, this is a strong argument against the Legislature having intended to give such right; but if it contains provisions under which compensation can be obtained, it needs a strong context to show that the right to support is not given; under the Act in the present case compensation could have been successfully claimed for the damage occasioned to the landowners by making their mines unworkable; the Legislature, therefore, must be taken to have intended to give a right of support, & ptfs. were entitled to an injunction.—*LONDON & NORTH WESTERN RY. maintaining a navigable canal; & it was enacted that they should for that purpose have power to purchase lands for making the canal & the several works thereby authorised to be made, & to enter into & upon the lands of any person or persons, & to construct & do all other matters which the co. should think necessary & convenient for making & using the canal & other works, the co. doing as little damage as might be in the execution of the several powers thereby granted, & making satisfaction in manner thereafter mentioned for all damages to be sustained by the owners of & persons interested in such lands as should be taken, used, or prejudiced in or by the execution of the Act, provided, nevertheless, that nothing in the Act should entitle the co., on purchasing any lands for making the canal or for any other purposes aforesaid, to any mines of coal, ironstone, or other minerals which should be found in cutting or making the canal & other works aforesaid or that should be under the same, but that all such mines should appertain & belong to such person or persons as would have been entitled to the same in case the Act had not been made.

The purchase-money & compensation properly payable upon taking the lands were duly ascertained, & there had been no default in payment.

Defts. were the owners of a colliery which they were working, & the land under which their mines were situate was traversed for a considerable distance by the canal. Defts., in the ordinary course of working their mines, were desirous of working the coal subjacent or adjacent to the canal:—Held: (1) defts. were entitled to get so much of the subjacent & adjacent coal as they could get without destroying or injuring the proper support of the canal & works; (2) they were not entitled to get the coal to the destruction or injury of that support; (3) the whole compensation having been assessed at once at the time of the purchase by ptfs.—i.e., compensation for the right of support as well as for the conveyance of the surface of the land—defts. could not now be entitled to compensation for that in respect of which they had already been compensated.—*GLAMORGANSHIRE CANAL NAVIGATION CO. v. 454. — Support for water pipe.—By sect. 38 of a local Act the Edinburgh Water Co. were authorised to take & use grounds & premises for the purpose of forming reservoirs & to make the necessary cuts for conducting water to the city & to lay the necessary pipes for that purpose, giving one month's notice of their intention to the owners & occupiers of such grounds & premises & making satisfaction to such owners & occupiers in manner thereafter directed. In 1823 a strip of ground was opened by the co. & a pipe laid, part of which passed through the lands of appts. & their predecessors. The pipe was continuously used without question down to the commencement of this action in 1898, when it was threatened with injury by appts. working certain minerals lying under the pipe. The co. having raised an action for an interdict to restrain appts. from working the minerals adjacent to the pipe so as to injure it, it did not appear that any payment or satisfaction had been made by the co., in respect of laying the pipe:—Held: after nearly eighty years' enjoyment of the way—leave it must be presumed that whatever was necessary to obtain the right to support for the pipe had been done.—CLIPPENS OIL CO. v. EDINBURGH DISTRICT WATER TRUSTEES, [1904] A. C. 64; 73 L. J. P. C. 32; 89 L. T. 589, H. L.

455. Agreement by limited owner—Scheduled to private Act.—Under a settlement dated July 7, 1888, C. was in 1900 tenant for life in possession of a settled estate in the Isle of Thanet & was then a bachelor, & D. was then tenant for life in remainder. By an agreement dated Apr. 20, 1900, & made between C. & D. of the one part & the W. & B. Water Co. of the other part the co. was authorised to make an adit or tunnel under the settled estate, to be completed by Dec. 31, 1914, or such later date as the grantors should appoint, & it was agreed that upon completion the grantors should by deed grant to the co. the right in perpetuity to maintain & use the adit & that the co. should pay to the grantors in perpetuity a rent of 1s. a yard per annum & should supply a certain quantity of water free to farms on the estate. The grantors were defined as C. & D. & their successors in title under the settlement. By sect. 42 of the co.'s private Act the agreement was confirmed & made binding on the parties thereto & was set out in a schedule to the Act, but the settlement was not otherwise referred to nor any special powers conferred upon the grantors. The adit was not completed by the agreed date, which had been extended to June 30, 1915. It was now proposed that the completion should be postponed till Dec. 31, 1930, & that the co. should in consideration of the extension of time pay an increased rental & supply an increased amount of free water to the estate. C. was now married & had 3 daughters:—Held: though when an agreement confirmed by a private Act confers powers on a grantor outside any statutory powers special reference to such powers ought to be made in the Act, the confirmation of the agreement sufficiently expressed the intention of Parliament to confer such powers, & C. & D. jointly could further extend the time for completion of the works & grant a perpetual easement in consideration of a perpetual rentcharge which could be increased beyond the amount specified in the agreement.—*WESTGATE & BIRCHINGTON WATER CO. v. On special demurrer:—Held: the replication was bad, for that unity of seisin was not inconsistent with the right as alleged in the plea, & unity of possession, if that were meant by the replication, might have been given in evidence under a traverse of the right as alleged in the plea.—JENKINS v. WALL (1842), 10 M. & W. 699; 12 L. J. Ex. 273.

461. ——— Enjoyment as of right.—A plea under Prescription Act, 1832 (c. 71), ss. 2 & 5, alleging an easement enjoyed for twenty years, must state, in the words of sect. 5, that the enjoyment was had "as of right."

A plea stated that H., under whom defts. justify, was occupier of a close, & that he, while such occupier, & all other prior occupiers of the close, for twenty years next before action brought, & before the times when, etc., "have had, used & actually enjoyed without interruption, & of right ought to have had," etc., & that H., at the times when, etc., of right ought to have had, etc., & still of right ought to have, etc., for himself, etc., occupiers of the close, a certain way to pass, etc., as to the close of H. with the appurtenances belonging & appertaining: which averment pltf. traversed. After verdict for defts. on this issue, & on motion for judgment non obstante veredicto:—Held: the plea was bad.—HOLFORD v. HANKINSON (1844), 5 Q. B. 584; 1 Dav. & Mer. 473; 2 L. T. O. S. 367; 8 Jur. 463; 114 E. R. 1370; sub nom. HOLFORD v. HANKINSON, 13 L. J. Q. B. 115.

462. ——— Term excluded from computation of period of enjoyment.—Where a deft. pleads an enjoyment of an easement as of right for thirty years, under Prescription Act, 1832 (c. 71), & pltf. relies on the existence of a life estate, or any of the other portions of time which, by sect. 7 of the above Act are to be excluded from the computation of the thirty years, not being inconsistent with the actual fact of enjoyment, he is bound, under sect. 5 of the above Act, to plead such life estate, etc., specially.—PYE v. MUMFORD (1848), 11 Q. B. 666; 5 Dow. & L. 414;

464. ———.]—(1) In an action to restrain the obstruction of an alleged private right of way, pltf. ought to show in his statement of claim whether he claims the right by prescription or by grant. (2) He ought also to allege with reasonable certainty the termini of the way & its course. If pltf. omits to do this his statement of claim is embarrassing, & the ct. will order it to be amended.—HARRIS v. JENKINS (1882), 22 Ch. D. 481; 52 L. J. Ch. 437; 47 L. T. 570; 31 W. R. 137.

Annotation:—As to (1) Distd. Pledge v. Pontfret (1905), 74 L. J. Ch. 357.

465. ———.]—(1) Prescription Act, 1832 (c. 71), ss. 3 & 4, must be read together, with the result that a right to access of light is not absolute & indefeasible, even after twenty years' enjoyment, unless & until some action or suit is commenced in which this right is called in question; until that occurs the right remains inchoate.

(2) In an action to restrain interference with light, the only material period to be considered is the period of twenty years prior to the issue of the writ.

(3) It is competent for the tenant in occupation of the dominant tenement to give the "consent or agreement" mentioned in sect. 3 of the above statute, though by doing so he may prejudicially affect the landlord's inchoate right. Rights under sect. 3 are acquired or lost by virtue of the acts or acquiescence of the occupier, & not by virtue of his title.

(4) But in a case in which there is no express defence provided by the Act for the servient tenement, the right may still be claimed on any ground available before the Act; thus the Act says nothing about unity of title, or unity of possession, & it is, therefore, open to pltf. to plead his enjoyment from time immemorial, when the unity of possession or title is the only bar to his plea under the Act (FARWELL, L.J.).—HYMAN v. VAN DEN BERGH, [1908] 1 Ch. 167; 77 L. J. Ch. 151; 98 L. T. 478; 52 Sol. Jo. 114, C.A.

466. Trial without pleadings—Plaintiff relying on lost grant.—(1) In an action to restrain the obstruction of ancient lights in respect of premises which have been rebuilt, evidence of pltf.'s intention to preserve ancient lights upon the rebuilding is unnecessary.

(2) "Interruption" in Prescription Act, 1832 (c. 71), s. 3, bears the same meaning as in sect. 4, & refers to an adverse obstruction, & not to a mere discontinuance of user.

(3) The question whether there has been an actual enjoyment of the use of light under the statute for the statutory period is a question of alleged obstruction.—In an action for breach of covenant, by obstructing the tenants of pltf. in the enjoyment of an easement, pltf. was required to furnish a bill of particulars of the obstruction, the times of their occurrence, the names of the tenants obstructed, & the mode of the obstruction.—WILDRIDGE v. CLARKE (1849), 11 L. L. R. 589; 1 Ir. Jur. 151.—IR.

n. Where lost grant alleged.—In an action of trespass to try a right of way, deft. justified under a lost deed of grant from a former owner. The plea stated that the grant was made by C., afterwards Baron M., to the then Bishop of C.:—Held: that this general statement of the grantor's name did not make the defence embarrassing, within sect. 83 of C. L. P. Act, 1853.—STEELE v. IRWIN (1860), 12 Ir. Jur. 177.—IR.

o. Whether amendment allowed—Asserting different cause of action.—Where pltf., in the first & second counts of his summons & plaint, averred possession of a certain messuage & possession of a right of way appurtenant thereto, & the third count alleged trespass, to which the defences filed were a traverse of the right of way & of the special damage; the ct., on the affidavit of pltf.'s attorney, allowed the summons & plaint to be amended, by inserting an entirely new cause of action, viz., that pltf., as one of the public, was entitled to the way as a public way, that it had been so used for upwards of thirty years, & that deft. obstructed the public way, so that pltf. was obliged to go a circuitous way, & that deft. did considerable injury thereby to pltf.'s close; but the ct. refused to oblige deft. to plead on a given day, leaving it to the ordinary course as to time of pleading.—CHOOKE v. MURRAY (1861), 13 Ir. Jur. 391.—IR.

p. Acts complained of alleged to be user of easement—Whether good defence.—Pltf., in the first paragraph of the summons & plaint, complained that he was possessed of certain lands adjoining the river D., & was entitled to have the said river flow by & away fact to be determined according to the circumstances of each case.

Pltfs., who had rebuilt their premises, claimed a right to ancient lights in respect of portions of three windows in the new building which coincided with portions of three windows in the old building. A great part of the coincident area had been, in the case of two of the windows, boarded up, & in the case of the third window, covered with shelving, for more than a year before action brought; but the shelving allowed a substantial amount of light to pass through into the building:—Held: as to the two first windows, there had been such a discontinuance of user as to prevent the acquisition of any right by pltfs.; secus as to the third.

In the circumstances of the case the ct. made a declaration of pltfs.' right in lieu of granting an injunction, deft. undertaking to submit the plans of his proposed building to pltfs.

(4) Non-user which would not be sufficient to establish an abandonment of a right acquired may be enough to prevent the acquisition of that right under the Act. . . . I do not think that the user or non-user of the light can be entirely determined by simply considering whether an obstacle interposed to the light is fixed or movable. . . . It was, however, contended that as regards the portions of the windows which were boarded up, sufficient evidence had been given to establish a title under a lost grant. . . . In the present case the action was tried without pleadings, as the result of an order made on motion. . . . Counsel for deft. took the objection that this course was not open to pltfs. I think, however, it was open to pltfs., subject only to deft. having an opportunity of adducing evidence for the purpose of rebutting the presumption which arises from twenty years' enjoyment (STIRLING, J.).—SMITH v. BAXTER, [1900] 2 Ch. 138; 69 L. J. Ch. 437; 82 L. T. 650; 48 W. R. 458; 44 Sol. Jo. 393.

467. Allegation of lost grant.—What particulars pleaded.—Pltfs. in an action claimed in respect of N. Wood, & alleged that defts. had trespassed & broken down certain fences & caused damage. Defts. justified on the ground of the existence of certain rights of way which they claimed by common law & statutory prescription. They also claimed that by a deed, now lost, the owners in fee simple of N. Wood granted the rights of way to their predecessors in title, & also pleaded a similar lost grant with the concurrence of the freeholders & copyholders of the manor:—Held: defts. were not bound to state the dates & parties of the lost grants, but they must state whether they were made before a release in 1775, or between that date & the passing of 18 Geo. 3, c. 15, or subsequently to that Act.—PALMER v. GUADAGNI, [1906] 2 Ch. 494; 75 L. J. Ch. 721; 95 L. T. 258.

In whom prescription laid.—See Sect. 3, sub-sect. 2, ante.

SUB-SECT. 2.—EVIDENCE.

468. Plea of lost grant.—Evidence that presumed grantor was not seised in fee.—In an action of trespass quare clausum fregit, deft. pleaded that A. was seised in fee, & being so seised, granted a right of way by non-existing grant. Pltf. replied, traversing the grant:—Held: on these pleadings, it was not competent for pltf. to give evidence to show that A. was not seised in fee, for the purpose of rebutting the presumption of the grant.—COWLISHAW v. CHESLYN (1830), 1 Cr. & J. 48.

469. Plea of user under Prescription Act, 1832 (c. 71)—Evidence of prior user.—To support a plea, framed on sect. 2 of above Act, of a right of way enjoyed for forty years, evidence may be given of user more than forty years back.—LAWSON v. 472. — Evidence of actual user.—Semble: the person who asserts that an alleged twenty years' enjoyment of light has been interrupted during that period is bound, under sect. 4 of above Act to prove that some notice, other than that which arises from the mere existence of a physical obstruction, was given to the person interrupted by the person by whose authority the interruption was made.

A pltf. who alleges a twenty years' enjoyment of light must prove affirmatively a prima facie case of enjoyment. But, when he has done this, q. Plea of thirty years user by predecessor in title.—No corroborating evidence.—Insufficient.—Pltf. claimed a right of way over land of deft. from a meadow lying in the rear of deft.'s land to the highway. He testified on the trial that G., the previous owner of his lot of land, enjoyed an easement for thirty years, adversely to the party from whom deft. derived title, but he produced no deed & did not show that the easement, if such there was, had been conveyed to him. He also claimed under a deed of the meadow, from the exors. of G. in 1861; but as there was no evidence, except that of pltf. himself, of a continuous user by G. for twenty years, & the evidence taken altogether negatived such a user:—Held: neither G. nor his exors. could convey any right of way to pltf., & the verdict for deft. must be sustained.—TUPPER v. CAMPBELL (1877), 2 R. & C. 68.—CAN.

r. Refusal to produce title deeds in support of claim.—Presumed as evidence negating right claimed.—Pltfs. were owners of an hotel, & deft. of certain adjacent property. The two properties had at one time been united, & at that time the manager of hotel on behalf of the owner used to obtain water for the purposes of the hotel from a certain spring by means of a road which ran over land which subsequently became deft.'s. There was another but smaller & much less convenient path from the hotel to the spring. Pltfs. became owners of their portion of the property in 1886, & deft. of his portion in 1888. Pltfs. continued to use the above-mentioned road through deft.'s property for the purpose of getting water from the hotel until 1889, when deft. refused to permit them any longer to use the road. Pltfs. accordingly sued deft. for a declaration of their right of way over the said road, but refused to put in from the said lands, & that deft. penned back & obstructed the same, whereby the water overflowed & flooded the lands, etc. In the second paragraph he complained that he was possessed of certain lands & entitled to the herbage thereof, & that deft. wrongfully & injuriously caused a great quantity of water to flow in upon the lands & flooded them, whereby, etc. Dft. pleaded to both paragraphs that, at the time, etc., he was possessed of a mill near the river D., near which pltf.'s lands were situated; that for twenty years before action the occupiers of the mill enjoyed, as of right, the right of keeping a weir across the river, & of penning back the water for the purpose of working the mill, & that the alleged grievances were a user of that right:—Held: this defence was bad as a defence to the second paragraph of the summons & plaint.—O'BRIEN v. ENRIGHT (1867), 1 R. 1 C. L. 718.—IR.

deft. may displace the prima facie case, either by proving the existence of an obstruction at the commencement of the twenty years or a statutory interruption of the enjoyment at some time during the twenty years, or by showing by other evidence that pltf.'s evidence of enjoyment cannot be relied upon. In either way deft. will discharge the onus which is cast on him.—SEDDON v. BANK OF BOLTON (1882), 19 Ch. D. 402; 51 L. J. Ch. 542; 46 L. T. 225; 30 W. R. 362.

474. — Evidence of unity of possession.—ONLEY v. GARDINER, No. 419, ante.

475. Evidence of lateral obstruction of light.—(1) It is not to be laid down as a general rule that, where a building injuriously affecting ancient lights has been completed before the bill is filed, the ct. is unable to give damages unless the injury is such as would justify a mandatory injunction.

(2) The fact that the height of a building above an ancient light is not greater than its distance is not conclusive evidence that the light is not injuriously affected, but is prima facie evidence of there being no such interference with the light as the ct. will restrain, & requires to be rebutted by special evidence of injury.

(3) Prescription Act, 1832 (c. 71), has not altered the nature of the right to light or the principle on which the remedy for an obstruction of light is to be determined; it has merely substituted a statutory title for the fiction of a presumed grant.

(4) The extent of the right of an owner of ancient lights is to prevent his neighbour from building so as to obstruct the access of sufficient light & air to such an extent as to render the house substantially less comfortable & enjoyable—that is to say, that he is “entitled to sufficient light, according to the ordinary notions of mankind, for the comfortable use & enjoyment of that house as a dwelling-house, if it were a dwelling-house, or for the beneficial use & occupation of the house, if it were a warehouse, a shop, or other place of business (JAMES, L.J.). ”

(5) A greater amount of evidence is needed to prove a material injury to light by lateral or oblique obstruction than is necessary in a case of direct obstruction (LORD SELBORNE, C.).

(6) The nature of the case, which would have to be made for an injunction by the reason of the obstruction of air is toto ceto different from the case which has to be made for an injunction in respect of light. It is only in very rare & special cases, involving danger to health, or at least something very nearly approaching it, that the ct. would be justified in interfering on the ground of diminution of air (LORD SELBORNE, C.).—CITY OF LONDON BREWERY CO. v. TENNANT (1873), 9 Ch. App. 212; 43 L. J. Ch. 457; 20 L. T. 755; 38 J. P. 468; 22 W. R. 172, L. C. & L. J.

477. How conveyed—By lease—Without express grant.—By bargain & sale of land with a way to it, no way passes; for the bargain & sale conveys a use only; & there cannot be a use of what does not exist; but if a way be appurtenant to land, by a lease of the land the way passes to the lessee without any express grant.—BEAUDELEY v. BROOK (1607), Cro. Jac. 189; 79 E. R. 165.

479. — By parol demise.—To a declaration in trespass for false imprisonment deft. pleaded evidence the deed under which they became owners of the hotel property:—Held: pltfs. were not entitled to any right of way over the land in question. Owing to the non-production by pltfs. of their title-deeds, it must be presumed as against them that they evidence afforded thereby would be unfavourable to their claim, & no right of way in favour of pltfs. could be shown to arise otherwise, either as an easement of necessity or as an easement, the intention to grant which might be inferred.—WITZLER v. SHARPE (1892), 1 L. R. 16 All. 270.—IND.

a. Evidence of acquiescence in interruption of user—Value compared to evidence of usage.—In a question of a right of way evidence of an interruption acquiesced in, is of infinitely more weight than evidence of usage.—LEGG v. CROKER (1811), 1 Ball & B. 514.—IR.

t. Plea of twenty years user—Prima facie evidence of right claimed.—User for upwards of twenty years, although not proved to be adverse to deft. or those under whom he claims, a. Conclusiveness of certificate of title—As against unregistered easements.—Scmble: the provisions of Land Transfer Act, 1915, s. 58, that a certificate of title shall not be conclusive as to the omission of any easement created in or existing upon any land must be read subject to sects. 197 & 198 of the Act, for protecting a bona fide purchaser against unregistered interests.—CHURCH v. SNOODSILL, [1917] N. Z. L. R. 252.—N.Z.

PART IV. SECT. 1.

478 i. How conveyed—By word “appurtenances.”—Two adjoining hereditaments, A. & B., belonging to the same owner, were the subject of an absolute order for sale in the Land Judge’s Ct. Over B. there was a formed road constructed by the owner & used, but not as a way of necessity, for the purposes of A. B. was dismissed out of ct., & A. “with the appurtenances,” was subsequently conveyed by the Land Judge to a purchaser:—Held: a right of way over the formed road passed to the purchaser.—HEAD v. MEARA, [1912] 1 L. R. 262.—IR.

b. — General words—Whether undefined ways will pass.—A way must be a defined way in order to pass by the general words “all ways used & enjoyed,” when the way is not an existing easement or way of necessity.—ROBERTS v. DUNCAN (1890), 18 S. C. R. 710; Cam. Cas. 352.—CAN.

The latter was afterwards conveyed by the owner, who had previously obtained possession of both closes, to pltf. with “all buildings, privileges, easements, & appurtenances whatsoever to the premises belonging,

That deftd. had obstructed the right of way by erecting gates, & that pltf. had done the acts alleged to be a breach of the peace in removing the obstruction as lawfully he might:—Held: it was not necessary to show a grant of the right of way, by deed, if the jury were of opinion that the right of way was intended to be demised with the warehouse & premises, which were held by parol demise, as appurtenant thereto, & as a mode of enjoying the same.—CHUCK v. BENNETT (1845), 6 L. T. O. S. 238.

482. — Pump.]—If a lease be made of a house & piece of land, except the land on which a pump stands, with the use of the pump, the lessee may repair the pump, but no action of covenant lies against the lessor for not repairing it.

Where I grant a way over my land I shall not be bound to repair it, but if I voluntarily stop it up an action lies against me for the misfeasance; but for the bare nonfeasance, viz. in not repairing it no action at all lies. . . . In this case pltf. himself being the lessee might have repaired the pump: for although neither the soil itself nor the pump be granted to him, yet by the grant of the use of the pump the law has given to him this liberty; for when the use of a thing is granted, everything is granted by which the grantee may have & enjoy such use. 483. — Watercourse.]—The owners of a house had had for many years a supply of water by pipes passing through the adjoining land under circumstances which in the view of the ct. created occupied therewith, or reputed to belong, or be appurtenant thereto": &c. by the same deed, the grantee covenanted to suffer the tenants of the adjoining close to pass over the premises thereby granted, at intervals, in order to clean their part of the ash-pit & privy, described in the covenants as "adjoining those belonging to the premises hereby granted, & used therewith as part, parcel, & member thereof"—Held: the use of the portion of the ash-pit & privy, which, previously to the severance of ownership, had been enjoyed by the occupants of the premises granted to pltf., passed to him under the deed.—GEORGEIAN v. FEGAN (1872), 1 L. R. 6 C. L. 139.—IR.

d. — Registration of title.]—A person claiming rights of way over land under Real Property Act, 1861, must prove a transfer of such rights from the registered proprietor of the servient tenement, & such transfer must be registered on the certificate of title of the transferor, & semble: of the transferee also.—FORMBY v. ADRI- LAIDE CORPN. (1880), 14 S. A. L. 144.—AUS.

e. — By registered transfer.]—As a praedial servitude partakes of the nature of real property, it can only be conveyed by transfer duly registered in the Registry of Deeds. An unregistered agreement granting a right of servitude is not sufficient to constitute a servitude binding upon & running with the land.—JUBB v. FOURIE (1881), 2 E. D. C. 41.—S. AF.

f. Unregistered servitude—Whether effective against purchaser with knowledge.]—An unregistered servitude is effective against a purchaser with knowledge.—HANSEN & SCHRADER v. COLONIAL GOVERNMENT (1903), 20 S. C. 446.—S. AF.

g. Transfer of servitude to another tenement—Consent of servient owner—Necessity for.]—The owner of a tenement, in favour of which a duly registered praedial servitude exists, cannot transfer the benefit of the servitude to another tenement belonging to him without the consent of the owner of the servient tenement.—LOUW v. DE VILLIERS (1893), 10 S. C. 324.—S. AF.

h. Whether easement transferable apart from dominant tenement.]—The mtgee. in possession of land under Transfer of Land Act having buildings in which an easement of access of air had been gained over land of an adjoining owner covenanted "as mtgee. in possession" with the adjoining owner & with one of two trustees of a creditor's deed of assignment by the mtgor. to release the easement for value & the adjoining owner covenanted to grant to the mtgee. a licence for access of air terminable by notice. The deed was expressed to bind all persons deriving title under the adjoining owner, the mtgee. or trustee. A caveat was lodged by the adjoining owner. The mtgee. in fact at the time of the deed had been in adverse possession of the dominant tenement for more than fifteen years. The mtgor. still appeared on the register as registered proprietor of the dominant tenement, though he had died long before & his will had been proved. The easement had been acquired after the expiration of fifteen years. After the date of the deed the mtgee. transferred to a purchaser an estate & interest of the mtgor. in the land & the purchaser obtained a certificate to the dominant tenement free from incumbrances:—Held: Transfer of Land Act, 1915 (s. 145) read with the definition of "land" in sect. 4, does not authorise a sale by the mtgee. of an easement appurtenant to the land mortgaged in gross, without a sale of the dominant tenement.—TUCKETT v. BRICE, [1917] V. L. R. 36.—AUS.

an easement. The owner of part of the adjoining land proceeded to build a house over part of the line of pipes:—Held: the owners of the house had a right to go on the adjoining land & repair the pipes when necessary, & that by building the house their means of access to the pipes would be materially interfered with & rendered more expensive; & an injunction was granted to restrain the building of the house.

The right to have the pipes there as an easement upon the land, part of which deft. claims, carries with it the necessary right to enter on the land in order to do what is necessary to preserve the right as it exists (NORTH, J.).—GOODHART v. HYETT (1883), 25 Ch. D. 182; 53 L. J. Ch. 219; 50 L. T. 95; 48 J. P. 293; 32 W. R. 165.

485. — — — — — Sewer.]—In 1892 T. conveyed to the predecessors of plffs. as the sanitary authority under the Public Health Act, 1875 (c. 55), a piece of land for sewage disposal works, & granted to them the right to lay & construct specified sewers, through land belonging to the vendor, “& from time to time to repair, maintain, renew & improve the same,” reinstating the ground. The local board laid through the land an iron effluent outfall sewer, five feet underground. Under an agreement, dated June 14, 1910, C., who, in 1897, had purchased land through which the sewer had been laid from persons deriving title under T.’s will, subject to the easement for & right of access to the sewer, granted to defts. the right & liberty to deposit refuse on the land. Defts. had deposited refuse on the land, including portions under which plffs.’ sewer was constructed, their pipe being covered in Aug. 1911. In Oct. 1912, a leakage in the outfall pipe was discovered near defts.’ refuse bank. In Jan. 1911, defts. covenanted not to deposit specified materials, & to prevent those already deposited from being a nuisance, but no suggestion was then made that the deposits were injurious to the sewer. There was evidence that under substituted arrangements plffs. would shortly discontinue their use of the outfall sewer.

Defts. were willing to submit to an injunction restraining them from depositing refuse on the land, but plffs. asked that defts. be also restrained from permitting refuse from remaining on the land so as to prevent their free access for the purpose of repairing & maintaining the sewer. Defts. pleaded laches, acquiescence, & delay on the part of plffs.:—Held: plffs. were not bound in exercising their right of access to the sewer to take the land in the condition in which it was at the time at which they wished to exercise such right. Defts., by increasing the depth of soil above the pipe, had increased the obligation on plffs. in exercising their right under the grant in the deed of 1892. The acts of defts. gave rise to a good cause of action.—THURROCK GRAYS & TILBURY JOINT SEWERAGE BOARD v. GOLDSMITH (E. J. & W.), LTD. (1914), 70 J. P. 17.

Pltf.’s land had been copyhold of the manor of L. for a customary estate of inheritance, but in 1897 it was enfranchised, not under the Copyhold Acts, but at common law, the deed of enfranchisement containing no reservation of any right of way. Deft.’s land, which was part of the demesne land of the same manor of L., was held by deft. & his predecessors as tenants from year to year till 1914, when the freehold was purchased by deft. For eighty years deft. & his predecessors had used a way, which was not a way of necessity, over pltf.’s land. In an action for trespass brought by pltf. against deft. for using this way, deft. claimed that he had acquired, by the eighty years’ user, a right to the way:—Held: (1) in view of the rule that a legal origin must be presumed if such an origin is possible, the length of user of the way by deft. & his predecessors was sufficient to found a presumption that a custom existed in the manor of L. whereby a right of way could be acquired over land within the manor as appurtenant to other land within the manor; but (2) even if such a right existed, it was extinguished upon the enfranchisement of pltf.’s land without any reservation of the right of way being contained in the deed of enfranchisement.—DERRY v. The erection of dwelling-houses & other necessary structures on such plots necessarily alters the natural arrangement of the soil to such extent that the owner of an upper plot can no longer claim to allow all the water falling on it to flow on to a lower plot unless he acquires the servitudo stillicidii recipiendi.—BISHOP v. HUMPHRIES (1919), W. L. D. 13. —S. A.F.

Afterwards R. sold & conveyed his land on one side of the railway to P., not mentioning the crossing & not giving P. any right of way over the land sold. Afterwards the land retained by R. was sold to G., who insisted on his right to use the crossing:—Held: (1) after the conveyance to P. there was no right to use the crossing, & the co. were at liberty to stop it; (2) the right to the crossing was finally abandoned by the conveyance to P., & would not be revived if the lands on the two sides of the railway should again become invested in the same person.—MIDLAND RY. 492. Tenant for life—Settled Land Acts, 1882 (c. 38), ss. 3, 21.]—The B. Settled Estate & the M. Settled Estate adjoined one another, & each had appurtenant to some part of it a right of way or easement over some part of the other. It was to the advantage of the respective owners of the estates, for the purpose of developing the same, by order of the municipal council:—Held: the plea was bad, pltf.'s private right of way not being necessarily extinguished by the closing of the public road.—JOHNSON v. BOYLE (1853), 11 U. C. R. 101.—CAN.

l. ——Where land was used as a way in the early settlement of the country, but a regular public highway was afterwards substituted for it, & from that time, being fifty years before action brought, the old way was disused:—Held: an abandonment of the ancient right of way, if any, & the owner of the soil over which the way passed held it exempt from the public right whatever the extent of it may have been that had previously burdened it.—LEARY v. SAUNDERS (1860), 1 Old. 17.—CAN.

m. ——A person who purchases lots according to a plan, abutting upon streets laid out thereon, acquiesces, as against the person who laid out the plot & sold him the land, a private right to use those streets, subject to the right of the public to make them highways, in which case the private right becomes extinguished.—SKLITZKY v. CRANSTON (1892), 22 O. R. 590.—CAN.

n. ——Alteration of locality of way.]—Changing the locality of a way, from time to time, by the agreement of the respective owners, does not destroy the right of way, nor can the grant of a certain specific line for the road put an end to the right, in case a purchaser should buy without notice of the grant.—DIXON v. CROSS (1884), 4 O. R. 465.—CAN.

o. Compulsory purchase by railway company.]—When land is taken by a railway co. under their compulsory powers it is taken absolutely & free of all servitudes, unless it be otherwise provided in the special Act.

A railway co. by their private Act obtained compulsory powers to acquire land, & were taken bound to satisfy every claim competent to the town-council of a burgh for the "loss of all rights of servitude of which they shall be deprived by the construction of the co.'s works." Some years after the execution of the works the burgh contended that this clause by implication saved its servitude of way over a strip of ground in front of the station, which had been taken by the co. & converted by them into a garden, in respect that no works had been constructed to deprive the burgh of its right:—Held: the servitude had been extinguished.—OBAN TOWN COUNCIL v. CALLANDER & OBAN RY. CO. (1892), 19 R. (Ct. of Sess.) 912; 29 Sc. L. R. 818.—SCOT.

p. Severance in title of dominant tenement.]—Land for a highway, laid out in 1857, was granted by M. to def't. township corp'n., & the right to a cattle-pass under the highways, to be made & maintained & repaired by def't. corp'n., was reserved to M.:—Held: (1) the easement, including the obligation to maintain & repair, passed by M.'s will with the land which remained to M., the dominant tenement, & was not destroyed by the severance in title, by the will, of the north & south halves of the dominant tenement.—FREEMAN v. CAMDEN TOWNSHIP (1918), 41 O. L. R. 179; 13 O. W. N. 221.—CAN.

q. Sale for taxes—Servient tenement.—Necessity for notice to servient owner.]—Def't. contended that an easement or right of way enjoyed by pltf. over ten feet of land sold for taxes was that these appurtenant rights of way should be released so that each estate might be no longer incumbered with any easement in favour of the other. The question arose whether under above Acts a tenant for life of a settled estate could by way of sale or exchange release an easement which was appurtenant to such estate, or could out of capital money purchase the discharge or release of a right of way or similar right to which the settled estate was subject:—Held: whether or not the proposed scheme for exchange of the easements could properly be carried out, the better course would be that cross sales of the easements should be effected, that course being within the powers conferred by the above Acts.—Re BROTHERTON, BROTHERTON v. BROTHERTON, Re MARKHAM'S SETTLEMENT (1908), 77 L. J. Ch. 373; 98 L. T. 547, C. A.

SUB-SECT. 2.—WHAT AMOUNTS TO A RELEASE.

A. In General.

493. General rule.—Intention of dominant owner.]—(1) Though twenty years' user, in the absence of an express grant, is necessary for the acquisition of an easement, cesser of the use for a less time may suffice, in the absence of an express release, to show the abandonment of the easement. It is not so much the duration of the cesser as the nature of the act done by the grantee of the easement, or of the adverse act acquiesced in by him, & the intention which either one or the other indicates, which are material for the consideration of the jury; & the period of time is only material as one element from which the grantee's intention to retain or abandon his easement may be inferred against him. What period extinguished by the sale in 1893, as being included in the word "privilege" used in Consolidated Assessment Act, 1892 (s. 137), then in force:—Scoble: the law of Ontario does not provide for the taxation of easements, & the title to an easement cannot be extinguished by the sale for taxes of the servient tenement, without notice to the person who uses it & without opportunity for him to exonerate the land by the payment of taxes.—ESSEY v. BELL (1909), 18 O. L. R. 76; 13 O. W. R. 395.—CAN.

r. ——Dominant tenement.]—Land over which def'ts. claimed a right of way was sold for taxes in 1901 & conveyed to the purchaser in 1902:—Held: the taxes assessed against the land became a charge upon that land & every interest in it, including any right of way to which def'ts. might have been entitled, & the sale & conveyance of the land for taxes extinguished that right.—REACH (A. J.) CO. v. CROSLAND (1919), 43 O. L. R. 209; 45 D. L. R. 140.—CAN.

s. Mortgage.]—The mortgage, as such having in effect the legal estate in the dominant tenement, can validly release an easement subject to any liability for breach of duty.—TUCKETT v. BRICE, [1917] V. L. R. 36.—AUS.

PART VI. SECT. 2, SUB-SECT. 2.—A

t. Agreement for conveyance including easement.]—The City of T. offered land for sale, according to a plan showing one block of 5 lots, each about 200 feet in depth, running from east to west, bounded north & south by a lane, & east by a lane running along the whole depth of the of time, therefore, is insufficient in a particular case must depend on all the facts of it.

(2) On an indictment for obstructing a public footway, deft. set up a private horse & carriage way over the particular ground, in answer to which prosecutor set up acts of public user inconsistent with the private way claimed, & insisted that it had been thereby determined. The judge told the jury that no interruption of less than twenty years would destroy the private right:—Held: a misdirection, whether laid down as a rule of law or as a conclusive presumption of fact.

(3) In support of a claim to a carriage & horse way over a public footway to certain premises, a deft. indicted for obstructing the footway gave in evidence, after objection, two leases which purported to show that those under whom he claimed either were lords of the soil of the locus in quo, & as such grantors of an easement upon it for a term to the occupier of another tenement, or, being possessed of a right of way appurtenant to the other tenement, had granted it with that tenement to a lessee:—Held: they were not admissible to prove the right of way in question.—R. v. (Horsley) (1848), 12 Q. B. 515; 12 L. T. O. S. 371; 13 J. P. 136; 12 Jur. 822; 3 Cox, C. C. 262; 116 E. R. 960.

494. ———.]—(1) Where a prescriptive right to foul a stream has been acquired, the fouling must not be considerably enlarged to the prejudice of other people. The fact that the stream is fouled by others is not a defence to a writ to restrain the fouling by one.

(2) The mere suspension of the exercise of a prescriptive right is not sufficient to destroy the right, without some evidence of an intention to abandon it; but where dye-works had not been used for more than twenty years, & had been allowed to go to ruin:—Held: any right of fouling a stream attached to them was lost.

(3) The owner of land on the banks of a river can maintain a suit to restrain the fouling of the water of the river, without showing that the fouling is actually injurious to him. C., wishing to prevent the water of a river from being fouled by some dye-works, purchased from the owners of the dye-works a piece of land on the banks of the river, without communicating to them his object:—Held: in the absence of any express reservation by the owners of the dye-works of the right of fouling, C. could maintain a suit to restrain it.

(4) A mere suspension of the exercise of a right is not sufficient to prove an intention to abandon it. But a long-continued suspension may render it necessary for the person claiming the right to show that some indication was given during the period that he ceased to use the right of his intention to preserve it. The question of abandonment of a right is one of intention to be decided upon the facts of each particular case (LORD CHELMSFORD, C.).—CROSSLEY & SONS, LTD. v. LIGHTOWLER (1867), 2 Ch. 495. ———.]—In an action by resps. to assert a right of way which had been granted by applt.'s predecessor by deed in 1830 over his land, & along the boundary which divided land retained by him from land conveyed to resps.' predecessor, applt. pleaded that it had been abandoned:—Held: (1) abandonment being a question of intention, non-user by resps., coupled with user by applt. for farm purposes, of portions of land, subject to the easement, when the easement was not required, could not prove an abandonment of the entire right, & were inconclusive to prove an abandonment of portions thereof; (2) the omission in applt.'s & resps.' certificates of title to their respective lands under the Transfer of Land Act to record the easement, did not bar resps.' claim or relieve the servient tenement of its liability.

There can be no question of the abandonment of the entire right of way because an important part of it has been & is used by plffs. without disturbance. . . . It does not appear that the occupants of plffs.' land have ever had any occasion to use the northern part of the way or the southern part except once, & then they did so use it & to have required gates to be inserted in the wooden fence when the way was not wanted for use would have been an unreasonable act, the omission of which cannot be construed as the expression of an intention to abandon the right of way (per CUR.).—*JAMES v. c. Acquiescence—What amounts to.]—In a suit for the removal of a building which defts. had erected & which was an obstruction to plffs.' right to use a courtyard adjoining their residences; the land on which the building stood did not belong to either party, but all the inhabitants of the mohalla had from time immemorial exercised a right of way over it to & from their houses. On a part of the same land there had formerly block & connecting the other two lanes. South of this block was a similar block of smaller lots, running north & south. The lane at the east of the first lot was a continuation, after crossing the long lane between the blocks, of lot 10 in the second block. The advertisement of sale stated that "lanes run in rear of the several lots." M. purchased the first block, & C. lot 10 in the second. Before registry of the plan, M. applied to the city council to have the lane at the east of the block closed up & included in his lease, which was granted. C. then objected to taking a lease of his lot with the lane closed, but afterwards accepted a lease which described the land as leased according to the plan exhibited at the sale & plan 352, which showed the lane closed.

He brought an action against the city & M. to have the lane reopened:—Held: C. having accepted a lease after the lane was closed, in which reference was made to plan 352, he was bound by its terms & had no claim to a right of way over land thereby shown to be included in the lease to M.—*CAREY v. & thereby preventing the smoke from being carried off from it by the chimneys of such house, & for pulling down certain adjoining buildings of deft. by which the house of pltf. was deprived of the support to which it was entitled, deft. pleaded for a defence upon equitable grounds that the grievances complained of were occasioned by deft. pulling down a messuage of his & erecting another messuage in lieu of it, & deft. so pulled down the one messuage & erected the other, & expended thereby large sums of money, with the knowledge, acquiescence & consent of pltf., & on the faith that pltf. so knew of, & acquiesced in, & consented to deft. so pulling down the one messuage & erecting the other, & so spending such sums of money. Deft. being under terms not to rely on such plea as amounting to a common law plea of leave & licence, pltf. replied thereto, upon equitable grounds, that pltf. acquiesced & consented as in that plea mentioned upon the faith of false representations made to him by deft., viz. that the grievances complained of would not result from the pulling down of the one & erecting the other messuage, & expending of the money as in the plea mentioned:—Held: the plea was good as an equitable defence, but that the same was well answered by the replication.—*DAVIES v. On bill filed by W. for specific performance of the alleged agreement, & motion made to restrain the action:—Held: inasmuch as this was a case in which a ct. of law could not give relief in respect of the agreement, the equitable plea did not preclude W. from coming into equity; & W. was entitled to the injunction upon certain terms.—*WATERLOW v. 499. Agreement for conveyance excluding easement—Subsequent conveyance purporting to convey easements.—An agreement to grant A. a lease, in a form set out in a schedule, of property in the City, as soon as the house then in course of erection by A. on the property should be completed, contained a proviso that nothing therein contained should give A. a right to any easement which did not belong to the premises agreed to be demised as they then existed, nor to any right of light & air derived from over the houses opposite, which belonged to the lessors. The lease subsequently granted was of the land, together with the house erected thereon, & all lights, easements, & appurtenances thereto belonging, in accordance with the scheduled form:—Held: the grant by the lease of lights & easements was controlled by the antecedent agreement, which was to be read as part of the lease; & A. was not entitled to restrain the lessees of the opposite houses from building so as to obstruct the access of light & air to his premises from over such houses.—*SALAMAN v. 500. Agreement for conveyance reserving easement—Subsequent conveyance of easements.—]

By an agreement in 1870 between the vendor & a railway co. by their secretary, the vendor agreed to sell & the co. to purchase a piece of land, with a provision that the vendor should have a right of access to other lands belonging to him by & over any of the slopes which the promoters might arrange in their intended works. In 1871 the vendor executed a conveyance of the land to the co. without the reservation of any easement. The land was needed for raising a road over the railway, which road was raised accordingly, the slope of the approach of the road being separated from the vendor's neighbouring lands by a 7' 1" fence only. Recently the urban authority of the district had agreed with the co. to repair & maintain the road & slopes, & had raised the level of the road, steepened the slope, & built retaining walls at the foot of the slope, cutting off the access to the slope from the adjoining lands of the vendor. The successors in title of the vendor claimed an injunction. There was no claim for rectification of the conveyance or specific performance of the agreement:—Held: whatever right of access was reserved to the vendor under the agreement of 1870, it was abandoned on the execution of the conveyance.—TEEBAY v. MANCHESTER, SHEFFIELD & LINCOLNSHIRE RY. CO. (1883), 24 Ch. D. 572; 52 L. J. Ch. 613; 48 L. T. 808; 31 W. R. 739.

501. Release by mortgagor of dominant tenement—Effect of reconveyance by mortgagee.—]

The owner of two adjoining plots of land conveyed the western plot with a house thereon to his wife in fee simple together with a right of way over the eastern plot. The wife then conveyed the western plot & house by way of mtge. in fee simple together with the right of way over the eastern plot. Subsequently, while the mtge. was subsisting, the husband who still remained the owner of the eastern plot, by deed, dated May 25, 1907, conveyed that plot to pltf. in fee simple for a value & the wife joined in the deed for the purpose of releasing the eastern plot from the right of way. The deed contained a recital that under & by virtue of a certain indenture of conveyance Ann Williams or all was entitled to a right of way at all times & for assigns, purposes for Ann Williams, her heirs & assigns, western owners & occupiers of the house on the eastern plot over & across the eastern plot, & that the deed had been agreed that she should join in it, & thereby convey the purpose of releasing the land & the deed in its operative part stated that she thereby released the piece of land & hereditaments vested to her by the conveyance from the right of way reserved.

stood a thatched building used as a "sitting place" by the residents of the mohalla:—Held: (1) the right which was alleged to have been obstructed was not a public right of way, but a right which was confined to the people dwelling in the mohalla & going to & from the houses in the mohalla: & the suit being brought in respect of an interference with a private easement was maintainable without proof of special damage; (2) there was no principle of acquiescence involved in the case, inasmuch as there was no evidence that pltf. had given their actual consent to the building, & the only evidence of their acquiescence could be that they did not immediately protest, & defts. neighbours had a right to which they were bound.—AB KHAN v. MUHAMMAD YUSUF v. FATEHYA (1887), 1 L. R. 9 All. 434.—IND.—Grants by owners of adjoining tenements—Release by one binds all.—] indenture. The mtge. was not referred to in this deed, nor had pltf. notice of it. The wife died, leaving all her property to her husband & appointing him exor. of her will, & later the husband died, having appointed R. his exor. Subsequently R. paid off the mtge., & the mtgees. conveyed the western plot & the house thereon to him. R. thereupon conveyed the western plot & the house for value to deft. together with the right of way over the eastern plot. Deft. had no notice of the release of the right of way. Deft. claimed to exercise the right of way:—Held: the right of way was released by the deed of May 25, 1907, except as regards the rights of the mtgees., & upon the reconveyance by the mtgees. their right to take possession of the mtged. premises & to exercise the right of way determined & the right of way became absolutely released & extinguished; & deft. was not entitled to the right of way claimed.—*POULTON v. B. Non-User—Abandonment.

502. Effect of voluntary suspension of user.—Defts. having erected, on their own premises, a permanent obstruction to a navigable drain leading from a river through deft.'s premises to pltf.'s close:—Held: an action lay for pltf., notwithstanding the portion of the drain which passed through pltf.'s close had for sixteen years been completely choked up with mud.

The right of pltf. to this way is injured, if there is an obstruction in its nature permanent. If acquiesced in for twenty years it would become evidence of a renunciation & abandonment of the right of way. That is the ground upon which a reversioner is allowed to bring his action for an obstruction, apparently permanent, to lights & other easements which belong to the premises (TINDAL, C.J.).

The voluntary suspension by pltf. of his exercise & enjoyment of a right can form no justification to defts. for preventing him from the possibility of enjoying it (TINDAL, C.J.).—*BOWER v. 505. — Non-user for twenty years.—An immemorial right of way is not lost by non-user for upwards of twenty years, the user having been discontinued merely by reason of the party's having had a more convenient way.

The presumption of abandonment cannot be made from the mere fact of non-user. There must be other circumstances in the case to raise that presumption. The right is acquired by adverse enjoyment. The non-user, therefore, must be the consequence of something which is adverse to the user (ALDERSON, B.).—WARD v. WARD (1852), 7 Exch. 838; 21 L. J. Ex. 334; 155 E. R. 1189.

Where there has been a cesser of a right of this kind the party asserting it is bound to show that it had, at least, been exercised in the first & last year of the period of twenty years in order to preserve it from being lost. PART VI. SECT. 2, SUB-SECT. 2.—B.

508 i. Non-user must amount to abandonment.—The actual user of an easement by prescription under Limitation Act, R. S. O. 1914 (c. 75), ss. 35 & 36, must during the whole statutory period be such as to carry to the mind of a reasonable person in possession of the servient tenement the facts that a continuous right to enjoyment is being asserted & ought to be resisted if denied; but where the doctrine of

508 ii. — — — — —]—Pltf. claimed a prescriptive right to the flow of the surface drainage water from the land of deft. on to his land:—Held: such an easement can be acquired only where the water flows in a definite channel. In a suit for interrupting the flow of water from the land of deft. to the land of pltf. it appeared that eight years before suit deft. had diverted the water, & that it had been diverted ever since:—Held: the right, if acquired, would not necessarily be lost by the interruption, but if pltf. acquiesced during that time in the interruption it might be some evidence of an abandonment of the right.—KENA

508 iii. — — — — —]—An easement can be extinguished by the dominant owner releasing it expressly or impliedly to the servient owner, & if expressly released it would amount to an alienation. In 1864, the then owner re-opened the doorway, & restored it to its former position. In a suit to restrain the obstruction of the right of way:—Held: the bricking up of the doorway did not amount to an abandonment of the easement, & an injunction was granted.—*COOK v. 510. Circumstances as presumption of abandonment—No intention manifested to resume user.—If an ancient window has been completely shut up with brick & mortar above twenty years, it loses its privilege.—LAWRENCE v. OHEE (1814), 3 Camp. 514, N. P.

511. —[—]—(1) The right to light is acquired by enjoyment, & may be lost by a discontinuance of the enjoyment, unless the party who ceases to enjoy at the same time does some act to show an intention of resuming the enjoyment within a reasonable time. Where in case by a reversioner for obstructing lights, it appeared that pltf.'s messuage was an ancient house, & that adjoining to it there had formerly been a building, in which there was an ancient window, next the lands of deft., & that the former owner of pltf.'s premises, about seventeen years before, had pulled down this building, & erected on its site another with a blank wall, next adjoining the premises of deft.; & this latter, about three years before the commencement of the action, erected a building next the blank wall of pltf., who then opened a window in that wall in the same place where the ancient window had been in the old building:—Held: he could not maintain any action against deft. for obstructing the new window; because, by erecting the blank wall, he not only ceased to enjoy the light, but had evinced an intention never to resume the enjoyment.

(2) Although a right of common, except as to common appendant, or a right of way being a privilege of something positive to be done or used in the soil of another man's land, may be the subject of legal grants, yet light & air, not being to be used in the soil of the land of another, are not the subject of actual grant; but the right to insist upon the non-obstruction & non-interruption of them more properly arises by a covenant which the law would imply not to interrupt the free use of the light & air (LITTLEDALE, J.).—*MOORE v. 512. — Disuse prejudicial to dominant tenement.—The long enjoyment of a right of way by A. to his house or close, over the land of B., which is a prejudice to the land, may most reasonably be accounted for, by supposing a grant of such right by the owner of the land; & if such a right appear to have existed in ancient times, a long forbearance to exercise it, which must be inconvenient & prejudicial to the owner of the house or close, may most reasonably be accounted for, by supposing a release of the right. In the first class of cases, therefore, a grant of the right, & in the latter, a release of it, is presumed (ABBOTT, C. J.).—DOE d. PUTLAND v. HILDER (1819), 2 B. & Ald. 782; 106 E. R. 551.

On the trial of an action for this obstruction, the judge directed the jury that, if the right had once been acquired, it continued unless lost; & he directed them, if they thought the right had once been acquired, to find for pltf., unless they thought his predecessor had, in blocking up the windows, manifested an intention of permanently abandoning his right to the light, or unless they thought that the lights had been kept so closed as to lead deft. to alter his position in the reasonable belief that the lights had been permanently abandoned. Pltf. having had a verdict:—Held: deft. had no ground to complain of this as a misdirection. Qu.: whether the manifestation of an intention to abandon the lights communicated to the owner of the land would destroy the right, until the owner of the land altered his position in reliance thereon.—*STOKOE v. evidence that the owner of pltf.'s property knew of the trespass:—Held: the work done on the strip of land was not of so permanent or substantial a nature as to justify the inference that pltf. had relinquished his right of road; & consequently, the servitude had not been lost by reason of the owner of the dominant tenement having permitted acts inconsistent with the servitude.—

BRAUN v. POWRIE (1903), 20 S. C. 476. —S. AF.

5. Circumstances as presumption of abandonment—Acquiescence in acts of servient owner.—Abandonment of an easement may be shown not only from acts done by the owner of the dominant tenement indicating an intention to abandon, but also from acquiescence in acts done by the owner of the servient tenement. Where, therefore, the owner of the property over which a right of way existed built, with the knowledge of the owner of the property for the benefit of which the right of way had been reserved, & after some years pulled down the ice-house, & with the same knowledge built a stable on the same site, & a row of shops

—In 1871, houses & shops in Essex Road, Islington, were put up for sale at auction in eleven lots. One of the conditions was that a strip of land fifteen feet in width running the entire length of the lots & being the rear portions of the back gardens of the houses should be formed into a roadway, & that the lots were sold subject to & with the benefit of a right of way from the back garden of each house along the proposed roadway into Church Road, which bounded the side of lot 1, on the south-west, & that the respective purchasers should as soon as possible remove the garden fences & form the roadway. In each of the original conveyances to the purchasers of lots 1, 2, & 3 that condition was recited; & lot 1 was conveyed subject to the right of way of the owners of the other lots, & lots 2 & 3 were each conveyed with the benefit of & subject to the right of way in the condition mentioned; & in each of the conveyances the obligation was cast upon the purchaser to contribute towards the expense of forming the road. In the subsequent title deeds relating to pltf.'s & deft.'s properties the existence of the right of way was expressly mentioned. In 1873, the purchaser of lot 1 granted a lease thereof to pltf.'s father for fifty years, which expired on June 24, 1922, subject to the right of way, & the lessee covenanted to keep the site of the roadway in good repair & to contribute towards keeping it in repair & erecting & maintaining gates at the entrance of the roadway into Church Road. On July 25, 1904, that lease was assigned to pltf. subject to the right of way of the owners of the other lots. In 1911, pltf. purchased & had conveyed to him in fee simple lots 2 & 3, subject to & with the benefit of the right of way. It appeared that at the time of the sale in 1871 the several lots were divided from one another by fences of some kind which extended across the 15 feet strip, & that a brick wall separated lot 1, including the end of the strip, from Church Road. It also appeared that from 1871 to 1922 the roadway was physically incapable of being used as such, owing to its site never having been formed into a road & having been allowed to remain obstructed by the dividing fences, & further that, with the tacit acquiescence of the owners for the time being of the several lots, the condition of the site of the proposed roadway had never been altered throughout that period, & that pltf. himself did nothing from 1911 to 1922 to assert his rights. In 1883 pltf.'s father, by levelling up part of the site of lot 1, caused a sheer drop of 6 feet to occur in the strip between that lot & the adjoining lot 2. About the year 1919, pltf., in anticipation of the expiration of his lease in June, 1922, entertained a scheme of building a garage on the site of lots 2 & 3 & to use the strip as a roadway from the same into Church Road, & with that object in view he pulled down part of the wall which had, since 1871, separated the end of the strip from Church Road & erected gates there. Shortly after the expiration of the lease, deft., who was entitled to the freehold of lot 1, challenged pltf.'s right by erecting a wall across the site of the roadway between lot 1 & lot 2.

Pltf., accordingly, commenced this action, in which he sought a declaration that he was entitled, as the owner of lots 2 & 3, to a general right of way along the site of the proposed roadway at the rear, & forming part of lot 1, into Church Road, & for an injunction:—Held: although the mere non-user of the right of way was not conclusive evidence of its abandonment, yet having regard to the facts above stated & the conduct of pltf. & his predecessors in title there was sufficient evidence of the abandonment of the right of way in question.—SWAN v. SINCLAIR, [1924] 1 Ch. 254; 93 L. J. Ch. 155; 130 L. T. 530; 88 J. P. 80; 40 T. L. R. 222; 68 Sol. Jo. 321, C. A.

521. ———.]—B. & T. were owners of adjoining lands, B. having a private right of way over T.'s land. In 1801, when B. was selling his land to X., pltf.'s predecessor, it was agreed that B. should have the use of a new private road which T. had lately made on his land instead of the old way. That agreement was embodied in the conveyance made by B. to X., to which T. was for this purpose a party. B. thereby released his old right of way to T., who granted the new way to X. in these words, "to & from every or any part of the pieces or parcels of land hereinbefore described," thus giving to X. a right to come out upon the new road at any point at which he could get access to it. The new road did not exactly skirt the boundary of that part of X.'s land now held by pltf., there being at that part an intervening strip of T.'s land varying in width. X. made a gateway opening out of that part of his land now held by pltf., & a track from it to the new road over the intervening strip, & that gateway & track had been used from pltf.'s land ever since. Pltf.'s land had for some years been fenced in along the intervening strip, in which the gateway was the only opening. Neither pltf. nor any of his predecessors had occasion to open out any other gate or to make any other track into the road.

Deft., who represented T., apprehending, however, that an attempt might be made to open out another gate, erected posts & rails along the intervening strip in such a manner as to prevent exit from pltf.'s land at any but the accustomed place:—Held: (1) in the absence of anything in the original grant expressly limiting the grantee to one line of access, or to access only at the points, if any, where his land actually adjoined the new way, & of anything to show that the right as claimed was unreasonable, or destructive of the object of the grant, no obligation to elect one particular line of access could be implied; (2) there had been no manifestation of intention to abandon the easement.—*COOKE v. 522. —[Pltfs., as owners of certain lands, had a right of way over a strip of land 10 ft. wide on adjoining property in the occupation of defts. Some years before action brought, pltfs. erected a summer-house which projected over the strip of land to the extent of 2 ft. 4 in. Before action brought, defts. erected & eight months prior to the date of the writ they completed the erection of a stable on the strip of land which obstructed pltfs.' right of way. Pltfs. brought an action (1) for a declaration that they were entitled to the right of way; (2) an order requiring defts. to remove the buildings in question; (3) for an injunction to restrain defts., their servants & agents, from obstructing pltfs. & their tenants, in the exercise of such right of way. Defts. pleaded extinguishment or abandonment before action brought:—Held: (1) on the facts, pltfs. had proved their title to & had not abandoned or extinguished their right of way; (2) partial abandonment, by the erection of a summer-house projecting across a portion of the strip of land was not, in the circumstances, sufficient evidence of abandonment; pltfs. were entitled to an injunction & 40s. damages, but owing to the fact that defts.' obstructing building had been completed eight months before action, an order for its removal could not be made.—YOUNG (TRUSTEES OF YOUNG, DECEASED) v. STAR OMNIBUS CO., LTD. (1902), 86 L. T. 41.

C. Alteration of User.

523. By agreement.—[A plea of twenty years' user of a right of way, under Prescription Act, 1832 (c. 71), is not defeated by proof of an agreed alteration of the line of way, nor by a temporary non-user under an agreement of the parties.—*PAYNE v. 524. Substantial alteration.—[Pltf. had a barn, in the side of which, adjoining deft.'s premises, were apertures, by which, chiefly, the barn was lighted. Pltf. converted the barn into a malt-house, & cut windows where the apertures had been in the barn. Deft. erected on his own ground a fence before the windows, which obstructed the access of light. In an action on the case for such obstruction, evidence was offered at the trial to show that the mode of enjoying the light had been essentially altered by pltf. himself, in a manner prejudicial to deft. The judge did not receive the evidence, but directed the jury, if they thought that deft. had left pltf. less light than he enjoyed before the present windows were made, to give damages for such diminution:—Held: evidence of the above description was receivable, & it might have appeared from such evidence that pltf. had altogether lost his right to the easement in question.

A party may so alter the mode in which he has been permitted to enjoy this kind of easement as to lose the right altogether (LORD DENMAN, C.J.).—GARRITT v. SHARP (1835), 3 Ad. & El. 325; 1 Har. & W. 220; 4 Nev. & M. K. B. 834; 111 E. R. 437.

525. Slight alteration.—(1) In an action for the obstruction of a watercourse, it appeared that pltf. had three years ago slightly altered the course of the stream, at a point between its exit from deft.'s land, where the obstruction took place, & its entrance upon his own land; & that more than twenty years ago the stream had for some time ceased to flow to pltf.'s land, & had resumed its ancient course only nineteen years before the commencement of the action:—Held: pltf.'s right was not thereby destroyed.

(2) It is further objected that the right claim has been lost by desuetude, the water having many years since discontinued to flow in its accustomed channel, & having only recommenced flowing nineteen years ago. That interruption, however, may have been occasioned by the excessive dryness of seasons or from some other cause over which pltf. had no control. But it would be too much to hold that his right is therefore gone; otherwise, I am at a loss to see why the intervention of a single dry season might not deprive a party of a right of this description, however long the course of enjoyment might be (TINDAL, C.J.).—HALL v. SWIFT (1838), 4 Bing. N. C. 381; 1 Arn. 157; 6 Scott, 167; 7 L. J. C. P. 209; 132 E. R. 834.

526. What is sufficient alteration.—Question for jury.—[In an action by resps. for damages in respect of a nuisance committed by applts. & for an injunction, it was alleged that applts., who had a prescriptive right to load, unload, & store coals on their wharf in such manner as to spread their coal dust over resps.' wharf, had within twenty years so extended the site of their operations &

& by the destruction of the tenement the servitude had been extinguished, & pltf. had no right to maintain the suit for the right of easement.—TEKA RAM v. DOORGA PERSHAD (1866), 1 Agra, 196.—IND.

h. Interruption.—[Held: Ontario Act, R. S. O. 1877, c. 108, reducing the period of limitation to ten years, does not apply to the interruption of an easement, such as a right to a way in alieno solo, in this case a lane, which deft. had occupied & obstructed for ten years, but which pltf. had used prior to such obstruction.—MYKEL v. DOYLE (1880), 45 U. C. R. 65.—CAN.

PART VI. SECT. 2, SUB-SECT. 2.—C.

525i. Slight alteration.—[The termini a quo & ad quem of a way over deft.'s land, used & enjoyed as of right by pltf. & his predecessors in title for upwards of twenty years before the commencement of the action, had not varied during that period, except at two points, where, about fourteen years before action, one of pltf.'s predecessors slightly altered the line of the way for the purpose of going round muddy spots, & the user of the original line at these two points was abandoned for the substituted one. These deviations were short as compared with the length of the way:—Held: they did not operate to do away with pltf.'s right to claim the way between the termini, that way having been substantially used during the whole period.—WARREN v. VAN NORMAN (1898), 29 O. R. 508.—CAN.

altered the structure of their works & the conduct of their business as to produce injurious effects not covered by any prescriptive right. The question submitted was whether applts.' works taken as a whole had by their extension been rendered more injurious than before to resps.' works taken as a whole. The jury found that there had been no increase in inconvenience & discomfort to resps., & a verdict was entered for applts. On motion before the full ct. judgment was given for resps., on the ground that the change in the incidence of the dust produced by the extension & alteration of site & works so altered the nature of the easement as to constitute a new wrong:—Held: on appeal, the question whether by this extension & alteration there had been a variation in the kind of servitude imposed on resps. substantial enough to cause a new & appreciable wrong was a question of fact which had not been submitted to the jury, & there must be a new trial.—ROYAL MAIL STEAM PACKET CO. v. GEORGE & BRANDAY, [1900] A. C. 480; 69 L. J. P. C. 107; 82 L. T. 530, P. C.

527. Right to pollute—Alteration lessening pollution.—In 1832 applts. came into possession of a certain factory, & then commenced the business of fellmongers & manufacturers of sheepskin rugs, which they carried on down to 1852, & during this period the refuse of the fellmongery & sheepskin factory was discharged into a certain stream, which was an arterial drainage within the jurisdiction of resps. In 1852 the business of tanners was added, & the refuse from the tanyard was in addition to the other refuse, discharged into the stream. In 1878 applts. altered their premises, & began the manufacture of leather boards, & the washings from such new factory, which were different in character from those before discharged, were from & after 1878 poured into the stream; no refuse of tannery or fellmongery was then poured in, but only the washings of the dyes used to colour the leather boards. Such washings were not so foul in degree as the washings from the factory before 1878. Applts. were summoned by resps. for causing or permitting these washings of the leather board manufactory to flow into the stream, & were convicted & fined. Resps. contended that the pouring into the stream the refuse of the fellmongery & sheepskin manufactory from 1832, & the refuse of the tannery from 1852, did not confer the right to pour into the stream the refuse & washings from the leather board manufactory opened in 1878, either under the Prescription Act, 1832 (c. 71), or at common law. Applts. contended that they had proved a legal prescriptive right to cause such washings to flow into the stream:—Held: the conviction was right, as applts. had not, at the passing of the Land Drainage Act, 1861 (c. 133), the right to pour into the stream the refuse & washings of their leather board manufactory, & the fact that they had poured other refuse & washings into the stream since 1832 did not give them such right, although those washings were less foul than those formerly poured into the stream.—(CLARKE v. SOMERSETSHIRE DRAINAGE COMRS. (1888), 57 L. J. M. C. 96; 59 L. T. 670; 36 W. R. 890; 4 T. L. R. 539; 52 J. P. Jo. 308, D. C.

D. Alteration of Dominant Tenement.

(a) Easements other than Light.

528. Rendering user of dominant tenement impossible—Water.—LIGGINS v. INGE, No. 119, ante.

529. ————]—If an ancient ditch has at one end anciently opened into a stream, & the owner of a mill on the stream has kept the opening at the end of the ditch closed for twenty years & more, without interruption, that would give the mill-owner such a right to keep it closed, that the owner of the land adjoining the ditch would not be justified in re-opening the communication, although it might appear that the communication between the ditch & the stream was ancient.

If the owner of a water mill worked by a ground-shot wheel at a low head of water, alter the wheel to a breast-shot wheel, which requires a high head of water, & after that, for twenty years & more, discontinue the use of the breast-shot wheel, & resume the use of the ground-shot wheel, his discontinuance will cause the mill-owner to lose his right to the higher head of water.—DREWETT v. SHEARD (1836), 7 C. & P. 465.

530. Burden on servient tenement not increased—Water.—(1) A person having two ancient fulling mills, to which was annexed by prescription a right to a watercourse, pulled them down, & erected two mills to grind corn:—Held: the prescription remained.

(2) If pltf., in an action on the case for disturbing his watercourse, prescribe to have the watercourse to his mills generally, it is sufficient.—LUTTRELL'S CASE (1601), 4 Co. Rep. 81 b; 70 E. R. 1063.

closes with water for the watering of cattle. Deft. traversed the right to the flow of the water as alleged.

It appeared in evidence at the trial, that pltf. had enjoyed an immemorial right to the flow of this water into an ancient pond in one of his closes, but that, above thirty years ago, he made a new pond in each of the three closes, & turned the water so as to supply them, & thenceforth disused the old pond, which was gradually filled with rubbish & overgrown with grass. Pltf.'s right in respect of the three ponds having been defeated by proof of an outstanding life estate, under Prescription Act, 1832 (c. 71), s. 7:—Held: he was entitled, under this declaration, to recover in respect of his right to the flow of water to the old pond.—*HALE v. (2) An user of the subject of an easement for twenty years will create a right, though interrupted by intervals of suspension by such an unity of possession, such intervals being excluded from the computation.

(3) When it is sought to establish a right to an easement by user, & it appears that the user has varied, it is for the jury to say, whether the user has been commensurate with the right claimed.

(4) Though a party, having an easement of eavesdropping from a thatch resting on a wall, increases the height of the wall, & the projection of the thatch, he may maintain an action against a neighbour who does an act which not only prevents the enjoyment of the extended easement, but which would also interrupt it if existing within its proper limits.—*THOMAS v. the same, such dispute should be finally settled by the comrs. appointed under the powers of the Act. In an action on the case the declaration alleged that defts., owners of a steam-engine, who had laid down a pipe communicating with the canal, used the water which had been drawn off by means of the pipes for other purposes than for condensing the steam, & more than was necessary for condensing:—Held: (1) the special power of the commissioners did not take away the right of action; (2) the action would lie though no specific damage was alleged.—*KING v. m. ———.]—Revivor.—A right of way which had existed for many years in connection with marsh land was extinguished by unity of seisin in deft. who became owner by purchase of the servient tenement. Deft. almost immediately mortgaged the marsh land, & in the mtgo. described the way in the same terms in which it had been described in previous conveyances. Later, he released to the mtgoes. his equity of redemption, & the mtgoes. sold to pltf. including the right of way as described in the mtgo. R. 81.—CAN.

550 i. Unity of possession without unity of seisin—Suspension of easement.—In order to acquire a right of way of enjoyment for twenty years it must be proved that the claimant has enjoyed it for the full period required, as of right, & if there has been unity of possession for all or any part of that time, the claimant will not have enjoyed as of right the easement, but the soil itself. A defence on this ground to a claim of right of way is sufficiently put in issue by a plea that the claimant is not entitled to such right of way as alleged.—SMITH v. McDONALD (1878), 3 R. & C. 283.—CAN.

550 ii. ———.]—A testator dying

in 1874 devised adjoining lots of land, 4 & 5, to his two sons respectively. House No. 9 stood mainly on lot 4, but also partly on lot 5, & house No. 13 stood on the remainder of lot 5, there being a passage way between the two houses, used in common by the occupants of both for the purpose of getting in wood & coal & getting out ashes. Applt., the owner of lot 4, had, as was admitted, by virtue of a conveyance from the devisee of lot 4 & by Stat. Limitations, acquired title to the portion of lot 5 on which house No. 9 stood. The passage in question was used by the occupants of house No. 9 from the time of the death of the testator until 1895, but during the period from Mar. to June, 1894, the owner of No. 13 was also the tenant of No. 9.—Held: the unity of possession during that period interrupted the running of the statute, & applt. had not acquired a right of way as an easement by prescription.—Re COCKBURN (1896), 27 O. 550 iii. ———.]—In a suit to restrain deft. from obstructing the access of light & air through certain windows of pltf.'s house, it appeared that both the tenements had formerly constituted the joint property of a Hindu family, & that in 1835 a partition took place among the various members composing it, by which the tenement in the occupation of pltf. became separated from that occupied by deft.; & that the latter property was, in 1860, purchased by pltf. jointly with one G., but under the purchase pltf. took sole possession thereof; that in 1867, however, he relinquished it in favour

(2) An union of the ownership of dominant & servient tenements for different estates does not extinguish an easement of this description, but merely suspends it so long as the union of ownership continues, & upon a severance of the ownership the easement revives.

(3) Where a right to an easement of this description is acquired against the owner of a leasehold interest in the servient tenement, it is acquired also against the owner of the reversion.

Part VII.—Rights of Way.

SECT. 1.—IN GENERAL.

566. How arising—By grant—Prescription—Necessity.—(1) A way cannot be claimed from one part of a man's ground to another.

(2) A stranger may have a way over another's soil three manner of ways, viz. for necessity, by grant, & by prescription (per Cur.).

(3) The grantee of land shall have all the ways, easements, etc., which the grantor had.

(4) The grant of a house is also a grant of a way to it. By the grant of a house to which there is a way of necessity, without more, the grantee shall have the way as well as if it were specially mentioned in the grant (per Cur.).—STAPLE v. HEYDON (1703), 6 Mod. Rep. 1; 2 Ld. Raym. 922; 3 Salk. 121; 87 E. R. 768.

567. ————]—An easement, by implied grant, of communication with a dwelling-house, through land not conveyed therewith, cannot be claimed in virtue of anything short of absolute necessity for the user.

Pltf. claims to have a right of way from the grantor. A right of way can only pass by prescription, grant, or necessity. There is no question here of grant or prescription, & there is no preservation in the deed; & therefore it was argued upon the third point, to the effect that the law implies a right of way of necessity under the circumstances of the case. The question is, whether the domestic uses for which this way may be used makes it a way of necessity. I think that it would be most dangerous to hold that they do. Where a man has used his premises in a certain way for some time, & it can be brought home to the knowledge of the purchaser, the conveyance can be supposed to be made with an intention of reservation, on the part of the grantor, & the land passes subject to such a user. But here there are no such facts (WILDE, B.).—DODD v. BURCHELL (1862), 1 H. & C. 113; 31 L. J. Ex. 364; 8 Jur. N. S. 1180; 158 E. R. 822.

571. ————]—Over structure erected under statutory power—Pier.—Pltfs., the Improvement Comrs. of the river T., acquired certain lands & constructed a pier under statutory powers, the work being done at intervals between 1854 & 1891. The public were in the habit of using the pier as a promenade & for various purposes of pleasure & recreation, & pltfs. alleged that they never desired nor intended to prevent the public from so using it as a matter of favour. Finding, however, that a claim as of right was being set up, pltfs., in Dec. 1897, placed barriers across the landward end of the pier, & ordered the pier to be closed for 24 hours. Thereupon the mayor & other officers of the adjoining borough of S., being refused admission broke down the barriers & also certain permanent gates across the pier. Pltfs. now sued them for the trespass. At the same time an action was brought against the comrs. in the name of the A.-G. alleging that the said pier & the several parts thereof had been from time to time dedicated to the use of & accepted by the public as a common & public highway, & had been & were used by the public for the purposes of boating, bathing, fishing, embarking, disembarking, recreation, & other lawful purposes, with power to stray on & off the sands at the side of the pier, & alleging in the alternative, a lost grant to the mayor, aldermen, & burgesses of S., for the benefit of themselves & the inhabitants of S., & claiming a declaration that the public & the inhabitants of S. were entitled to exercise such right of way & such other rights:—Held: (1) a right of way could exist over a structure erected under statutory powers; & (2) an owner might dedicate his land for purposes of recreation; but (3) a licence to stray on & off a right of way required such a case to prove it, that it could practically never be proved; & (4) the plea of a lost grant could not be maintained; (5) the various obstructions, erected from time to time by pltfs. with the object of saving their rights had been a sufficient assertion of their rights; (6) pltfs. must be presumed to have dedicated a simple right of way within certain assigned limits.—TYNE IMPROVEMENT COMRS. v. lessee that there shall be no communication or way across the demised land to a certain other place; qu.: whether the mere opening of doors in a wall is a breach, without any user of the communication; but a user across the demised land may be a breach, even although the doors have been opened by a third party.

(1) It is not necessary to show any acts of commission on the part of deft.; if there was a breach of the covenant he is responsible (BYLES, J.).

(2) Though there is a right of way the soil remains in the owner, who may deal with it in any way not inconsistent with the right of way acquired (BYLES, J.).—BOUGNIS v. EDWARDS (1860), 2 F. & F. 111.

575. ——— Claim of possessory title by grantees.]—(1) In order to acquire a title to land under Real Property Limitation Act, 1833 (c. 27), it is necessary to prove discontinuance of possession by the true owner or dispossession of the true owner.

(2) When dispossession has to be inferred from equivocal acts, the intention with which the acts are done is all important.

(3) Pltfs., having a right of way for agricultural purposes over a strip of grass land belonging to defts. leading from a public highway to pltfs.' field, put up gates at each end of the strip, which they kept locked, & grazed the grass & clipped the hedges of the strip:—Held: these acts, being compatible with the intention of protecting & exercising the right of way rather than that of excluding the true owner, were insufficient to establish pltfs.' title to the strip of land under above Act.—*LITLEDALE v. 577. ——— Same way may be public & private.]—In 1838, the occupier of a field called the Hall Close, took down the old fence & added to the field a strip of land adjoining a public road. In an action for a trespass committed upon the strip of land about a year after it had been taken in, the declaration described the locus in quo as the Hall Close:—Held: it was properly described.

There may be both an occupation way & a public highway over the same road, for it does not, on becoming a highway, cease to be an occupation way (DENMAN, C.J.).—BROWNLOW v. TOMLINSON (1840), 1 Man. & G. 484; 8 Dowl. 827; 1 Scott, N. R. 426; 133 E. R. 423.

578. ———.]—A public bridle road & footway, fifteen feet wide, had been set out by an award which provided that the same should also be used as a private carriage & drift way by the owners of certain adjoining allotments. Pltfs., owners of these allotments, placed a bar across eleven feet of the width of the way in order to preserve their exclusive right to the use of the way as a carriage & drift way, & brought an action for injunction against the surveyor of highways who had removed the barrier for the purpose of repairing the way:—Held: the public had the right to the use of the whole length & breadth of the way as a bridle road & footway.—PULLIN v. DEFFEL (1891), 64 L. T. 134.

580. ———.]—Pltfs. had been entitled from 1855 to a carriage way to property of theirs over a railway by a level crossing. By an Act of Parliament obtained by the co. in 1875, reciting that it was expedient that the rights of way in respect of certain footways which crossed the railway on the level should be extinguished, it was enacted that all rights of way in, over or affecting the footways numbered 2, 4, 5, 6, & 7 on the deposited plans, should be extinguished. No provision for compensation was made. The roadway in question was numbered 5 on the deposited plans, & was thereon marked "roadway & footway," the others being marked simply "footway":—Held: upon the true construction of the Act, it did not interfere with private rights of way, but only with public rights of footway, & an injunction restraining the railway co. from obstructing the way had been rightly granted.—WELLS v. LONDON, TILBURY & SOUTHEAST RY. CO. (1877), 5 Ch. D. 126; 37 L. T. 302; 41 J. P. 452; 25 W. R. 325, C. A.

581. When claimed as public way—Where doctrine of dedication inapplicable—Established by grant or prescription.]—(1) In the Channel Islands, where the doctrine of dedication to the public is unknown title to a right of way must be made out by the public as by a private individual, by either grant or prescription. In an action by applt. to have it determined that the public had no right of way over his property:—Held: a registered minute of a resolution of the Seigneur & resident tenants of the Island of Sark, where it was situated, which did not duly record a completed transaction of grant, being rather a note of an unaccepted offer, was neither in form nor effect sufficient to create a title in the public.

584. Reservation out of grant—Operating as re-grant.]—Case by a reversioner against a railway co., for entering & making a railway on his land. (1) Plea, that, before the reversion of pltf. the dean & chapter of Durham were seised in fee, & by indenture between them & pltf. demised to pltf. the lands in question for a term, "excepting & reserving the mines under the same, with power to dig, & carry away the mines, with free ingress, egress, & regress, way-leave & passage to & from the same, or to or from any other mines, lands, & grounds, on foot & on horseback, & with carts & all manner of carriages, & also all necessary & convenient passages, & powers whatsoever, for the purposes aforesaid, & particularly of laying, making, & granting waggon ways in & over the last-mentioned premises, or any part thereof." The plea then justified the making the railway by defts. as the servants of the dean & chapter, & by their authority. Replication, admitting the seisin in fee of the dean & chapter, & the demise to pltf., & that he had no other title except under such demise, de injuria, etc., on which issue was joined.

(2) On the trial, it appeared that the railway co. had made a double line of railway on pltf.'s land, under a deed executed by the dean & chapter, authorising the co. to make such a railway for the conveyance of passengers, coals, goods, wares & merchandise. The railway was constructed for the purpose of conveying general goods & passengers as well as coals, but had not been actually so used, & the railway was not more than was necessary for the carriage of the coals likely to be sent along it from the part of the county with which it communicated:—Held: if the railway was such a railway as the co., at the time when it was made, might lawfully make for the purposes for which, when made, they might lawfully use it, the pltf., as reversioner, had no ground of complaint by reason of the intention of the co. to use it also for other purposes for which they had no right to use it.

(3) The proper question for the jury was, not whether the railway was made for other purposes as well as for the carriage of coals & minerals, but whether, at the time when the road was made, it had become necessary or expedient for the co. to make a road for the purpose of getting the excepted mines, & if so, whether the road actually made was a proper road for that purpose, assuming that it would be used for no other object. (4) The only right reserved to the dean & chapter under the above clause in the indenture of demise by them to pltf. was that of making & granting the right of making ways over the demised lands for the purpose of getting the excepted woods, mines & minerals. (5) The right possessed by the dean & chapter under the clause as lessors, was not the subject of an exception, as it was no parcel of the thing granted; nor of a reservation, as it did not issue out of the thing granted; but it was an easement newly created by way of grant from the lessee. It was to be presumed that the deed was executed by both parties, lessee as well as lessors.

(6) A right of way cannot in strictness be made the subject either of exception or reservation. It is neither parcel of the thing granted, nor is it issuing out of the thing granted, the former being essential to an exception, & the latter to a reservation. A right of way reserved to a lessor is, in strictness of law, an easement newly created by way of grant from the grantee or lessee.—DURHAM & SUNDERLAND RY. CO. v. WALKER (1842), 2 Q. B. 940; 3 Ry. & Can. Cas. 36; 2 Gal. & Dav. 326; 114 E. 585. — Must be specific.]—Trespass for breaking & entering a close called the Hencroft. Plea, that C. being owner in fee of the said close granted to H., by indenture, a way over the said close for the occupiers of a certain dye-house, & that deft. being in the occupation of the dye-house committed the said trespasses. Pltf. cravedoyer of the indenture, & set it out in his replication. By the indenture C. granted, bargained, etc. to H. all those newly erected buildings standing & being partly on the said close called the Hencroft, & partly on B., together with all & singular out-houses, edifices, buildings, roads, ways, etc., & appurtenances with the said premises usually held, occupied, or enjoyed; the said C. reserving to himself exclusively the said Hencroft, with the rights, privileges, & appurtenances within & to the same belonging:—Held: (1) the plea was bad in omitting to aver that the way had been usually held, occupied, or enjoyed with the Hencroft. (2) No right of way was granted by C. over the Hencroft.—TATTON v. HAMMERSLEY (1849), 3 Exch. 279; 18 L. J. Ex. 162; 12 L. T. O. S. 354; 154 E. R. 848.

586. — Indefinite as to time of operation.]—In 1889 deft. conveyed to pltf.'s predecessors in title a strip of land for a tramway, the deed containing a reservation by the vendors of the right to cross the line at two points to be selected by them, & a covenant by the purchasers to "make & provide" crossings at the point selected by the vendor on notice being given. In 1892 defts. gave notice of one point selected, & from that date crossed the line there from time to time, but no crossing was ever constructed. In 1910 pltf. obstructed the crossing, sought to restrain deft. from using it:—Held: the reservation was void as breaking the rule against perpetuities, but that the covenant contained an implied personal obligation not to interfere with deft.'s crossing, which obligation became fixed & attached to the land as soon as the point was selected, & pltf. had notice thereof, & was bound thereby.—*SHARPE v. 587. Grantor cannot derogate from grant—Right of way by demise—Effect of subsequent demise.]—In case for obstructing a right of way, pltf. proved an interrupted user for seventeen years. Deft. claimed a right to the soil under a subsequent demise, containing a covenant that the lessee should contribute a rateable proportion of the expense of repairing the fences, paths, ways, etc., used in common with the occupiers of other premises, near or adjoining thereto, belonging to the lessor. It appeared that the passage over which pltf. claimed a right of way was the only one to which this covenant could apply:—Held: the right of way in pltf. was not inconsistent with the demise to deft.—*OAKLEY v. Proposed or intended way—At date of grant—Way completed before deed executed.]—A covenant for “the free use of the newly intended road whenever the same may be made” will not apply to a road which, when the parties contracted, was newly intended to be made, but was executed & complete before the sealing of the covenant.—CRISP v. 590. ——— Width of way narrowed.]—Lease of a parcel of building ground described the premises as abutting on “an intended way of thirty feet wide,” which was not then set out. Lessee underlets the premises, & describes them as abutting on “an intended way,” without mentioning the width. The soil of the intended way, together with the adjacent land on the other side, is afterwards sold by the owner to another person, who narrows the intended way to the extent of three feet, by building a wall thereon:—Held: the tenant of a house built by the under-lessee was entitled only to a way of necessity & convenience, & such being left him, he could not maintain case for the alleged encroachment.

The declaration of an intention cannot be construed as an implied grant. Then does the under-lease carry the case any further? I apprehend not. That lease describes the premises in question with abutments, “together with all ways thereunto appertaining.” Now under these words the right of way in question would not pass, it being over the soil of the original lessor. I agree they would give a way ex necessitate as far as the convenient enjoyment of the premises demised are concerned, but no further (HOLROYD, J.).—HARDING v. WILSON (1823), 2 B. & C. 96; 3 Dow. & Ry. K. B. 287; 1 L. J. O. S. K. B. 238; 107 E. R. 319.

591. ———.]—(1) P., the owner in fee of an estate called L. estate, having sunk a shaft for working coals thereunder, staked & set out a road across L. from a public highway on the west to the colliery, & to the east to another public highway. The road from the west to the colliery being formed, but the remainder to the east being only staked out, P. in 1832 agreed with one A. for the sale to him of a piece of land which was described in the conveyance (not executed until Dec. 1, 1840) as being “bounded on the north by the road leading to the said P.’s colliery,” “together with the free use & enjoyment by A., his heirs, appointees, tenants, & assigns, of the above mentioned road leading to the said colliery at all times & on all occasions, he & they contributing a proportionate part of the expense of keeping such road in repair.” In 1846, A. conveyed this piece of land, together with the right of way, to ptf.:—Held: the deed of 1840 conveyed to A. & his assigns the right to use the road across the L. estate to the east as well as to the west, though part of it was only staked out at the time of sale.

(2) In 1858 ptf. purchased from B. a piece of land, abutting upon the land conveyed to A. by the deed of Dec. 1, 1840, which was described in the conveyance as “adjoining at one end thereof to a certain road or highway leading from C. to R.” At the time of this purchase, the only mode of access to this piece of land was by means of an opening at the west corner upon the road described in the conveyance. By an Act for the formation of the S. railway, a new road was directed to be made in lieu of a portion of the old road numbered 4 on the plan deposited under the standing orders, & that so much of the road numbered 22 thereon as should lie between the point at which such new road terminated & the point where the road numbered 4 met the road numbered 22, should cease to be used as a public highway, “without prejudice to the existing rights of the owners & occupiers of adjoining lands at all times thereafter to use the same for all purposes”:—Held: this reserved to ptf. right of way to the whole of their premises over that part of the road numbered 22 which lay between the new road & the point where the road numbered 4 met it.—WOOD v. STOURBRIDGE RY. CO. (1864), 16 C. B. N. S. 222; 143 E. R. 1111.

598. Choice of route in grantor—Estoppel by defining route.]—By lease, dated in 1862, the S. E. Ry. co. demised to pltf., for 21 years, the space under & within one of the arches supporting

C. station, together with a right of way for him, his servants, agents & customers, with or without carts & carriages, from the said arch into V. street. At the time of the lease, & for eight years after, the only way by which pltf. could get to V. street was by passing over an open space lying in front of pltf.'s arch & the adjoining arches, in a northerly direction, in front of two arches occupied by G., & then turning east into V. street. Pltf. used this way exclusively till 1880. In that year the co. made a way into V. street, a little to the south of pltf.'s arch; after this pltf.'s carts occasionally used this new way, but more generally continued to use the old one. In 1882 the co. put a fence across the open space barring the old way used by pltf., but they made gates in this fence & gave pltf. keys. Pltf. continued till 1888 to use the old way through the fence by means of these gates. The right of way granted was in no way defined in the lease or the plan thereon & had never been paved, set out, or otherwise defined on the land. In Dec. 1888, the co. put new locks on the gates, & claimed to prevent pltf. passing through, & to confine him to the way made in 1880:—Held: the right of way granted by the lease being undefined by the deed, the right to define the line it should take was vested in the co. as the grantor, but that the co. by their action in putting up the gates & giving pltf. keys, had defined the way & could not afterwards alter it, & that the injunction must be granted.—DEACON v. SOUTH EASTERN RY. CO. (1889), 61 L. T. 377.

In 1878 the corp'n., with the privy of deft. co., leased to pltf. co. the northern part of the land, on which the railway station had been built, for 100 years, together with a right of way from time to time & at all times over the southern part of the land, which was leased by the corp'n. to deft. co., through a circular road. The way was not definitely described, & it was never in fact used by pltf. co.:—Held: until pltf. co. used the demised premises as a goods station in accordance with the provisions of the Act of 1860, their right of way did not arise; & the claim to the right of way was so undefined & unlimited that it could not be maintained.—*METROPOLITAN RY. If a way granted by a lease cannot be used, by reason of its passing over the land of third persons, & there is no other way to the lessee's house, he is entitled to a way of necessity to the nearest public highway, by the shortest line, across the grantor's land. In a suit by a purchaser of two lots for specific performance, the questions arose as to what rights of way he was entitled to have conveyed to him:—Held: the ct. could only act on the footing of the contract, & the purchaser could only claim a right of way over the road adjoining the lots, & directly thence into the public highway.—*RANDALL v. PART VII. SECT. 3, SUB-SECT. 2.—A.

611 i. What is a way of necessity—No other access to land.]—A way of necessity over lands of a grantor cannot be claimed where the grantees has any other way of access to his land.

614. ——— Wrongful stoppage of existing way—Creation of new way.]—A., the owner of a close situate within a close belonging to B., had a prescriptive right of way through B.'s to his own; 24 years ago B. stopped up the old way, & made a new way which was used ever since, but lately B. stopped up the new way. In an action brought by B. against A. for going over the new way:—Held: A. could not justify using this way as a way of necessity, but he should either have gone the old way & thrown down the inclosure, or brought an action against B. for stopping up the old way. The new way was only a way by sufferance during the pleasure of both parties; & B. by stopping it up determined his pleasure.—REIGNOLDS v. EDWARDS (1741), Willes, 282; 125 E. R. 1173.

611 iv. ———.]—The mere fact that a person will suffer considerable inconvenience if he be not allowed to use a certain road is not sufficient to constitute such road a way of necessity; but relief will be given if the only alternative route is practically impossible.—VAN SCHALKWIJK v. DU PLESSIS (1900), 17 S. C. 454.—S. AF.

611 v. ———.]—In an application in which appets. claimed as a way of necessity a road over resp.'s ground to enable them to have direct access from the respective dwellings to the nearest railway station, it appeared that appets. could obtain access to the station by another practicable but slightly more circuitous route, a road running along the portion of their land furthest away from their dwellings:—Held: the fact that the road claimed was a more convenient one did not entitle appets. to claim it as a way of necessity having regard to the other practicable road open to them.—CARTER v. DREMEYER (1913), 34 N. L. R. 1.—S. AF.

611 vi. ———.]—In a claim for a way of necessity the claimant must show that he has no reasonable sufficient access to the public road for himself & his servants to enable him, if he is a farmer, to carry on his farming operations. If he has an alternative route to the one claimed which runs over one or more intervening properties, although such route may be less convenient & involve a long journey, so long as the alternative route gives him reasonable access to a public road, he must be content, & cannot insist on a more direct approach over his neighbour's property.—LENTZ v. MULLIN, [1921] E. D. L. 268.—S. AF.

615 i. ——— Land bounded by public highway.]—There is no implied grant of a way of necessity over lands adjoining when the land granted is bounded by a public road, even though the said road may lead nowhere.—RIDDIFORD v. FOREMAN (1910), 29 N. Z. L. R. 781.—N.Z.

617. How pleaded.]—A person who prescribes in a que estate for a private way, cannot justify going out of it on the adjoining land, because the way is impassable. 618. General rule.—Title by grant.—Express or implied.]—PROCTOR v. HODGSON, No. 293, ante.

619. — Personal or statutory.]—The parties have admitted, though upon what facts or what view of the law we do not know, that deft. has acquired a title in fee simple in possession, under the Statutes of Limitation, to the two plots of land. The one point argued before us has been whether, assuming the premises to have passed to deft. by virtue of Stat. Limitations, a right of way over this approach inevitably came into existence over pltf.'s remaining land as a way of necessity & as distinct from any other way. There is nothing in Stat. Limitations to create ways of necessity. The statute does not expressly convey any title to the possessor. Its provisions are negative only. We cannot import into such negative provisions doctrines of implication that would naturally arise where title is created either by express grant or by statutory enactment. The doctrine of a way of necessity is only applied to a title by grant, personal or Parliamentary. Upon the hypotheses we are obliged to assume the title to the right of way can only be maintained if the statute gives it, which statute, however, does not apply to a right of way. It is not contended that the statutory enactment as to easements applies. We are therefore, unable to agree with the learned judge below (per CUR.)—WILKES v. GREENWAY (1890), 6 T. L. R. 449, C. A.

616 i. When right implied.]—Upon a severance of tenements, easements used as of necessity, or in their nature continuous, will pass by implication of law; easements not continuous or apparent, but used from time to time only, will not. A right of way is not such a continuous easement as to pass by implication of law with a grant of the land; only a way of necessity will so pass.—HARRIS v. SMITH (1876), 40 U. C. R. 33.—CAN.

616 ii. —.]—C. conveyed to I. L. fifty acres of land & also a strip twenty feet wide, to the south, to give access from the fifty acres to the town line. I. L. mortgaged to C. the fifty acres, but not the twenty feet strip, & then conveyed the strip to N. Afterwards I. L. conveyed the fifty acres to his son, subject to C.'s mtgo., & on the same day gave him the occupation, under an agreement for sale, of the adjoining fifty acres to the west. The son mtgd. to pltf. the fifty acres conveyed to him. During the possession of I. L. & his son they got access from the east fifty acres to the side line through the west fifty acres owned by I. L. The agreement for sale of the west fifty acres to the son having been cancelled, & I. L. having refused to allow a tenant of his son of the east fifty acres access to the side line through the west fifty acres, pltf. brought this action against R., C., & N.:—Held: pltf. was entitled to a declaration of the existence of a way of necessity through the west fifty acres, which was given by way of implied grant when I. L. conveyed to his son.—LUPTON v. RANKIN (1889), 17 O. R. 599.—CAN.

616 iii. —.]—If at the time a landlord lays out a farm for letting there is a usual & manifest way of access from it to the high road through other lands of the landlord, & if he demises the farm with the appurtenances & all easements usually enjoyed with it, the way will pass, even under a parol demise from year to year, although the way was not a strictly legal way of necessity, but a way the use of which was essential to the convenient use of the farm.—CLANCY v. BYRNE (1877), 1 I. R. 11 C. L. 355.—IR.

616 iv. —.]—Where part of an estate was sold to a tenant as agent for the purchaser, & the only practicable means of access to such part was a strip of land which to all outward appearances was, & was believed by the vendor & such agent to be, a public road, & had always been used as the only road to the part of the land sold, & such strip of land turns out to be the property of the vendor, the road is in the nature of a continuous & apparent quasi-easement, & the contract for sale would include in it by implication a contract to grant a right of way over the strip of land in question.—DRIVER v. OTAGO & SOUTHLAND INVESTMENT CO. (1903), 23 N. Z. L. R. 111.—N.Z.

c. Necessity must be clearly proved.]—LONDON & S. A. EXPLORATION CO. v. BULTFOUNTAIN MINING CO. (1890), 8 S. C. 55.—S. AF.

618 i. General rule.—Title by grant.—Express or implied.]—If, at the time a landlord lays out a farm for letting, there is a usual & manifest way of access from it to the high road through other lands of the landlord, & if he demises the farm with the appurtenances & all easements, etc., usually enjoyed with it, the way will pass, even under a parol demise from year to year, although the way was not a strictly legal way of necessity, but a way the use of which was essential to the convenient use of the farm.—CLANCY v. BYRNE (1877), 1 I. R. 11 C. L. 355.—IR.

620 i. Implied grant.]—B. & W. becoming entitled in 1830, as tenants in common, to a hundred acres of land, made a partition thereof by agreement, whereby fifty acres were allotted to each in severalty. The fifty acres allotted to B. were land locked, & there was no way out to the highway, except over the fifty acres of W., over which accordingly B. was allowed by W. to pass at will. B.'s parcel subsequently became vested in pltf. under conveyances granting not only the land, but also all ways, etc., therewith used & enjoyed. The right of way had been used by pltf. & his predecessors in title for over thirty years:—Held: it was not necessary for him to show any express grant of the right of way by deft., or his predecessors in title.—DIXON v. CROSS (1884), 4 O. L. 465.—CAN.

620 ii. —.]—Pltf. was the owner of a farm about two-thirds of which was heavily wooded, & the rest cleared & cultivated. Deft. became the purchaser of the trees & timber upon the land under an agreement which provided, among other things, that the purchaser should have "full liberty to enter into & upon the lands for the purpose of removing the trees & timber at such times & in such manner as he may think proper," but reserved to pltf. the full enjoyment of the land "save & in so far as may be necessary for the cutting & removing of the trees & timber." To have removed the timber through the wooded land at the time it was removed would have involved an expenditure which would have possibly amounted to a sacrifice of the greater portion of the timber:—Held: defts. had a right to remove the timber by the most direct & available route, provided they acted in good faith & not unreasonably, & the reservation in favour of pltf. did not minimise or modify deft.'s right, under the general grant of the trees, to remove the trees across the cleared land.—STEPHENS v. GORDON (1893), 22 S. C. R. 61.—CAN.

620 iii. —.]—K. owned lands over which he had for years utilised a roadway for convenient purposes. After his death deft. became owner of the middle portion, the parcels at either end passing to pltf., who continued to use the old roadway, as a winter road, for hauling fuel from his wood-lot to his residence, at the other end of the property. Though the three parcels fronted upon a public highway, this was the only practical means pltf. had for the hauling of his winter fuel, owing to a dangerous hill that prevented him getting it off the wood-lot to the highway. There was not any formed road across the lands, but merely a track upon the snow during the winter months, & the way was not used at any other season of the year:—Held: the circumstances in which the roadway had been used did not supply sufficient reason to infer that the way was an easement of necessity appurtenant or appendant to the lands formerly held in unity of possession, which would without special grant pass by implication, upon the severance of the tenements.—KNOCK v. KNOCK (1897), 27 M. C. R. 664.—CAN.

620 iv. —.]—In a suit for an injunction to restrain deft. from using a path on pltf.'s land:—Held: the use of the path, though not absolutely necessary to the enjoyment of deft.'s tenement, was necessary for its enjoyment in the state in which it was at the time of severance; & as the easement was apparent & continuous, there was a presumption that it passed with deft.'s tenement.—*CHARU SURNOKAR v. 627. —Operating as re-grant.—[—]Where the owner of a close surrounded by his own land grants the land & reserves the close, the implied right to a way of necessity to & from the close over the land operates by way of re-grant from the grantee of the land, & is limited by the necessity which created it. This re-grant, however, does not create a right to a way of necessity for all purposes for which the close may at any time be used, but only such a right of way as will enable the owner of the close to enjoy it as in the condition it happened to be at the time of the re-grant. For instance, if at the time of the re-grant the close was agricultural land, the owner of the close can only claim such a right of way as is suitable to the enjoyment of land in that condition; he cannot claim a right of way suitable to the user of the close as building land.

(2) Semble: the same rule applies if the grant is of the landlocked close with an implied grant of a way of necessity over the surrounding land.

623. 1. Implied reservation.—[—]A right way of necessity to land, surrounded by other lands, is created as well in the case where the grantor grants the reversion expectant on the determination of the outstanding leases in the surrounding lands, himself retaining a similar reversion in the lands surrounded, as when the grantor, being in actual possession, grants the surrounding lands themselves, retaining the lands surrounded; although at the time of such grant the tenant of the

d. Purchase of land adjoining purchaser's land.—Claim of way of necessity over vendor's land.—[—]A person purchasing a plot adjoining his own land, & having access to the plot through his land cannot acquire a way of necessity over his vendor's land of which the plot formed a part. 628. —[—]—A railway co., under the powers of a special Act & of Railways Clauses Act, 1845 (c. 20), bought a piece of land on part of which it made three railways, leaving the rest of the land within the triangle formed by the railways, except two small pieces on the west of its lines. The landowner from whom it bought owned the adjoining land on the east. This he afterwards sold, but acquired a right of way over it. He had also bought the two severed pieces on the west. The conveyances to the railway co. did not include the minerals under the land:—Held: (1) as under the special Act & under Railways Clauses Act, 1845 (c. 20), s. 80, the landowner when he sold the land was entitled to make passages under the railway from his land on the east, no right of way over the railway for the purpose of working the minerals would be implied, & he had not now such right of way; (2) being neither "owner, lessee, or occupier" of the land to the east, he had no right, under Railways Clauses Act (c. 20), s. 79, to work the minerals on the land within the triangle by means of passages under the railway; but he might work the minerals from the pieces of land on the west, & under s. 81 get compensation for extra expenses; (3) under Railways Clauses Act, 1845 (c. 20), s. 79, the owner of the minerals might, having lawfully made a communication with the land sold to the railway co., work the minerals by open workings, that being the usual mode of working such minerals in the district where the same were situate.

It seems clear on the authorities with regard to rights of necessity that where a grant is made with an exception or reservation in favour of the grantor, the so-called rights of necessity or implied rights which under that reservation pass to the grantor take effect by way of regrant by grantee to grantor & are limited by the necessity of the case (STIRLING, J.).—*MIDLAND RY. 632. ———.]—Where the owner of a farm severed it by will among his two sons & the moiety devised to one son was landlocked, except where it abutted on the moiety devised to the other, yet the will made no mention of any ways whatsoever:—Held: some way passed by implication under the will & the ct. would look at the previous occupation of testator's property, to see what way was meant by him to pass.

Under such circumstances, where the access to the landlocked premises, & to the farm buildings upon them, had been in testator's lifetime by one particular road across the moiety devised to the other son, & the enjoyment of the landlocked premises, in the state they were in when devised, was not complete without this particular road:—Held: this road passed under the will, & was not merely a way of necessity. Seem: if a way of necessity only had passed the way would have been limited by the necessity.—PEARSON v. of E., & others of whom, including pltf., had purchased their holdings from him. The moat, which had never within living memory been used for ordinary agricultural purposes, but had been preserved as an object of antiquarian interest, was approached by a path leading to it from the county road over the lands purchased by pltf. Deft. purchased the fee simple of the moat from E., & subsequently proceeded to cut down the timber growing on the moat, & to remove it by the path leading to the county road, claiming that he had a right so to use the pass as a way of necessity. In an action for an injunction brought by pltf. against deft.:—Held: deft.'s right to use the pass as a way of necessity was limited to such use as was suitable or necessary for the enjoyment of the moat in the condition in which it was at the date of the original severance of the lands; & deft. was accordingly not entitled to use the pass for the purposes of carting felled timber with horses & carts.—MAGUIRE v. The land had been agricultural land, to which the occupiers had had access by a path, called a warple-way, used only for agricultural purposes, but since the building operations had been commenced the path, which was the only mode of access to the land, & ran across land also held by pltf. under the building agreement, had been used for the cartage of bricks. The amount to be paid for the land taken & for compensation for damage was fixed by an umpire, & pltf. as "beneficial owner" assigned his interest to the board by a deed which contained a full recital of the circumstances under which the land was being acquired by the board. The board used the path for the cartage of materials for the sewage works:—Held: inasmuch as the land was being acquired for definite purposes, which purposes were known to pltf. at the times of the arbn. & of the conveyance, the extent to which the board was entitled under the conveyance to use the right of way was co-extensive with the purposes for which the land was acquired, & the board was entitled to use the right of way for all purposes connected with sewage works.—SERIFF v. proceeding to & from the dam:—Held: in the absence of any provision to the contrary, the selection of the route is left to the device of the owner of the dominant tenement, & when he has once exercised that choice he must abide by it, though it will be open to the owner of the servient tenement subsequently to point out a more convenient route, provided that the owner of the dominant tenement is not prejudiced in the exercise of the servitude.—SMIT v. RUSSOUW (1913), C. P. D. 847.—S. AF.

Defts. claimed that they were entitled to drive their stock, including sheep & goats, over any portion of the servient tenement, while pltf. claimed the right to restrict defts. to a defined & convenient route in enjoying their rights:—Held: as the grant in no way indicated the direction or route in which the stock should take nor the manner in which the servitude was to be exercised, & as by common law a real servitude must be exercised civilliter modo, pltf. was entitled to confine defts. to a defined & definite route.—SMIT v. m. CHRISTIE (1904), 24 N. Z. L. R.

Supposing that [pltf.], which I do not believe, had in his mind the intent to reserve this land, he could not consistently with what appears upon the face of these deeds prevent deft. from opening his door into the street, because he has described deft.'s land in his lease as abutting on the street. If then he afterwards prohibits deft. from coming there, is it not a sufficient answer to say "You have told me in your lease 'this land abuts on the road,' you cannot now be allowed to say that the land on which it abuts is not the road." We are therefore of opinion that the verdict is right (LORD MANSFIELD, C.J.).—ROBERTS v. KARR (1809), 1 Taunt. 495; 127 E. R. 926; previous proceedings (1807), 1 Camp. 202, n.

651. —"Bounded by newly-made streets"—Streets not in fact made.]—By a lease, under which deft. claimed as assignee, S. demised "all that plot of land, bounded on the east & north by newly-made streets," & on the west & north by other premises of the lessor & his tenants, through which there was no way, "a plan whereof is indorsed on these presents." On the indorsed plan the site of the new streets was shown, & was marked as "new streets." The lease contained covenants by the lessee to build two houses on the land, & "to kerb the causeways adjoining the said land." S. afterwards granted to pltf. a lease of the land comprised in the site of one of the proposed new streets, which had, in fact, never been made into a street, & pltf. inclosed the land, so that deft. was unable to reach the east side of his premises. In an action against deft. for pulling down this obstruction:—Held: under deft.'s lease a right of way was granted along the site of the proposed new streets to his premises.

The question we have to determine is, whether a private way was granted by the lease together with the plan indorsed upon it. The house was built as contemplated by the lease, abutting on each of the two intended new streets; & it is obvious that, unless a grant was expressed or is to be implied in the lease, of a way of some kind along both the north front & the east front of the

n. Not by construction of less convenient public road.]—The right to a way of necessity does not cease by the subsequent construction of a public road by which there is less convenient access to the land.—GARDNER v. HORNE (1848), 2 Thom. 278.—CAN.

o. By description of parcels conveyed.]—B. was seised of fifty acres of land. In his certificate, M. Street was shown running through his fifty acres down to the river. B. afterwards transferred to S. two pieces of the land, the boundaries of both being described by reference to M. Street. S. transferred one piece to P., who transferred to deft., & the other to L., the description in each case being by reference to M. Street, as in the original conveyance from B. Pltf.s, trustees of the will of L., prayed for a declaration that they were entitled to right of way over M. Street, & an injunction to restrain deft. from obstructing them:—Held: B. having in his transfer to S. described the land as bounded by M. Street would be estopped from denying house to be built, it would be impossible for the lessee to bring materials for the building which he had covenanted to erect upon the land, or to go into or out of his house on the north side or the east side whenever it should be built. & as the land was bounded to the west by land leased to H., & on the south by land of the lessors from which there was no approach or access to the land leased, the house so covenanted to be erected, could not be built at all; & if, or when built, would be absolutely unapproachable & inaccessible. It must, therefore, have been intended by the parties that there should be either a public way, or a private way, or a way of necessity. Now the claim to a public way was properly given up at the trial. The existence of a public way being thus negatived, it was contended by counsel for plff. that all that could be inferred or deduced from the lease & the facts of the case was, that the lessee had acquired a way of necessity. But a way of necessity exists only where the land conveyed or demised is surrounded by other lands of the grantor, & cannot be approached but by a way over the grantor's land where no way exists, & which thus becomes a way of necessity. But here the lessor, by the grant, has expressly described the land demised as abutting upon strips of land of his own to the north & the east, which he himself in the lease describes as newly-made streets, & which are distinctly delineated upon the plan, & therein called "new streets." The lessor, therefore, is estopped from denying that there are streets which are in fact ways, & which ways run along the north & the east fronts of the houses to be built on the demised lands, including deft.'s house, & of which streets or ways the way claimed in the plea to this action is a part (KELLY, C.B.).—*ESPLEY v. 652. — "Bounded by seashore" — Gradual accretion to land due to receding high-water mark.—In a conveyance the land granted was described as "situate on the seashore." The exact dimensions of each side of the plot were then given as well as its area, & it was stated that the plot was bounded on the south by other land of the grantor, on the east & north respectively by specified roads, & "on the west by the seashore." Reference was then made to a plan indorsed on the deed. The plan showed the dimensions as stated in the description:—Held: the word "seashore" must be taken to mean the "foreshore" in its strict legal sense, that is, the land situate between medium high & low water marks; & the land between the plot & the foreshore did not pass to the grantee, but the grantor was estopped from saying that the land to the west of the plot was anything but "seashore," & the grantee was entitled to free & unrestricted access to the sea from every part of his western frontage over every part of the land lying between that frontage & the sea.

In so far as the right of plffs. is based on estoppel, it seems to me that this right is supported by the judgment in Roberts v. Karr, No. 650, ante. This, I think, is sufficient to entitle plffs. to an injunction (VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.J.).

In my judgment, the grantor & defts. as his successors in title are precluded from setting up as against plffs. that the land to the west of the boundary shown in the plans on the conveyances is not "seashore" in the strict legal sense, so as to interfere with plffs.' access to the sea (STIRLING, L.J.).—*MELLOR v. 655. To land previously common—Enclosed forty-eight years before action brought.—A plea of way by prescription over A. to B. is not disproved by showing that 48 years ago B. was part of a common inclosed under an Act of Parliament, & allotted to the party under whom deft. justifies.

Plff. proved that B.'s close was, down to 1771, part of an open common, which was inclosed in that year under the provisions of an Act of Parliament, & that that close was allotted to B.'s ancestor. Deft. proved the user of the way by persons having a right of common over B.'s close for some years prior to the inclosure. It was objected, that as the close was a modern the right of way; this estoppel did not exist merely as regards S., but endured for the benefit of all his successors in title, that plffs.' right of way was, therefore, as well established as if B. had granted it by deed, & they were entitled to the injunction for which they asked.—LITTLE v. DARDIER (1891), 12 N. S. W. Eq. 319.—AUS.

p.—Plff. & the two defts. purchased a field, divided the front portion into lots according to a certain plan, laying off two lots as proposed streets, connecting an existing street with the undivided rear portion of the land & furnishing the only access to that rear portion from any existing street. Deft., 1., purchased the undivided rear portion & two of the front lots, one on each side of one of the proposed streets, the said lots being described in the deed as bounded on the north & south respectively by the street in question.—Held: plff. was estopped as a grantor in the deed to deft., 1., from denying that a right of way was granted over the land designated in the deed & on the plan under which the sales were made as proposed streets.—PUGH v. PETERS (1877), 2 L. & C. 139.—CAN.

q.—The owner of land sold it to G. reserving a right of way on its south side. G. sold by the same description, & with same reservation, to M., who, in turn, sold to the municipality of the county of B., bounding the land sold, on the south, by a lane or right of way, but without including the way. Subsequent conveyances at the end of the description contained the words "together with the easements & appurtenances to the same belonging," but none of them specifically conveyed the right of way.—Held: M., the owner of the fee in the land over which the right of way was claimed, was estopped from disputing the existence of the right of way, & the municipality, by their deed, acquired a perpetual easement or right of way over the land which thereupon became appurtenant to the land conveyed, & which passed to the grantees under subsequent conveyances.—MOLLENNAN v. HUTCHINGS (1917), 50 N. S. L. 359.—CAN.

r. Former recovery.—Deft. was charged with obstructing plff.'s right of way from his land over lot 14 to a highway, & back again from the highway over lot 14 to plff.'s land. To a plea denying plff.'s right to the way, plff. replied, by way of estoppel, a former recovery against deft. for obstructing a right of way then claimed by plff. from her land "over lot 14 to a highway, & back again from the highway over lot 14 to plff.'s land".—Held: replication good, for the issue was as to the existence of any right of way in plff. over lot 14, & that was determined by the former recovery.—*DEAN v. inclosure, a right of way to it could not be claimed by prescription. The jury found that there was a right of way over the locus in quo to B.'s close:—Held: the verdict for deft. was right.

Suppose this land, prior to the inclosure, to have been parcel of the waste, the lord may have had the right of way for himself & his tenants, & then every person taking an allotment under the inclosure would take the right of way with it. There was evidence that those who had taken allotments had exercised the right of way; from that the jury might infer that the lord originally had the right of way, & that it passed with the allotments (BAYLEY, J.).—(CODLING v. 660. Not inhabitants of district or parish.—

The inhabitants of a parish or district as distinct from the general public, may possess a right of way, but it must be by express grant, & cannot be presumed from user.

661. Ancient deed.—Supporting user alleged.—

Where in an action of trespass deft. justified, on the ground of a right of way, & proved a constant user of the way with carts & carriages, he was allowed to put in evidence a deed 120 years old relating to the property, as appurtenant to which the way was claimed, & containing a description of the way, for the purpose of showing that the way had always been enjoyed in conformity with the description contained in the deed.—BROWNSERD v. 663. ——— Subsequently conveyed away.—With no reservation of way.—A claim of a prescriptive right of way from A. over deft.'s close unto D., is not supported by proof that a close called C., over which the way once led & which adjoins to D., was formerly possessed by the owner of close A. & was by him conveyed in fee to another without reserving the right of way; for thereby it appears that the prescriptive right of way does not as claimed extend unto D. but stops short at C. Qu.: if the claim had been for a prescriptive right of way over deft.'s close towards D.—WRIGHT v. RATTRAY (1801), 1 East, 377; 102 E. R. 146.

664. User not as of right.—Licence.—Enjoyment partly as of right & partly by licence.—Extent of licence smaller than extent of right.]—In trespass quare clausum fregit, deft. pleaded that he & the occupiers of a certain house had, for twenty years, enjoyed, as of right, a certain way "from a certain highway, over pltf.'s close, to deft.'s house & back." The replication alleged that deft. had enjoyed the said way by lease & licence. It was proved that deft. had a right of way over pltf.'s close to the highway, & across it to a field of deft.'s on the other side, & that if a way over pltf.'s close to the highway was ever used for any other purpose than to get to the field on the other side, this was done by pltf.'s licence:—Held: a right of way to or from a highway is a right to go to or from it, & to or from each & every place beyond it, to which it leads; & as the licence here pleaded was proved not to extend to the whole of such right, the replication failed.—COLCHESTER v. 666. Notice of intention to use—Necessity for.]—If a man makes a feoffment in fee by indenture of his land, reserving a way to him over the land, this is clearly as a grant, & so good, & it is to be used whensoever he will; & he ought not to come to deft. & tell him when he has occasion to use the way, he is not to stop the way at any time, if he doth so an action upon the case will lie against him (DODDERIDGE, J.).—COLLYCUM v. SUB-SECT. 2.—WHO MAY ENJOY.

671. ——— Although not specifically named—Included in "assigns."]—To trespass for entering pltf.'s land, described as land on each side of a certain slip, deft. pleaded that before pltf. was possessed of the land, in which, etc., a certain railway co. were the owners in fee of the said land & slip, & that they demise the land in which, etc., "excepting & reserving thereout the said slip, & the dues payable for the use thereof, & excepting & reserving to the said co., their assigns, officers, servants, & workmen, free access to & from the said slip, for the purpose of using & working the same or otherwise," & that the said co. granted their licence to deft. to work & use such slip, & the plea justified the trespass as being committed in the exercise of such licence:—Held: a good defence, as the reservation in the demise enabled the co. to use the slip by themselves or their licensees, & the word "assigns" was not to be construed as limited to persons taking an estate in the land.—MITCALFE v. WESTAWAY (1861), 17 C. B. N. S. 658; 34 L. J. C. P. 113; 11 L. T. 673; 10 Jur. N. S. 1202; 144 E. R. 201; sub nom. MITCALFE v. WESTAWAY, 5 New Rep. 126; 13 W. R. 181.

673. ——— ———.]—A grant of a right of way "to the grantees, their heirs & assigns, & their servants, customers, & workmen, & the tenants & occupiers" of the dominant tenement, for all purposes to pass along a road & over a bridge, toll free, extends to licensees of the grantees, & is not limited to the classes of persons specifically mentioned.

Where a grant of a right of way is in general terms & various other words are added to the usual words of limitation, in the absence of any special circumstances pointing in an opposite direction, the proper inference is that the added words are not intended to be read as exhaustive, but rather as illustrative of the classes of individuals entitled to use the way; & such a grant, being appurtenant to the dominant tenement, ought to be so construed as to secure to the grantee all that is necessary for the reasonable enjoyment of the dominant tenement.—HAMMOND v. PRENTICE BROTHERS, LTD., [1920] 1 Ch. 201; 89 L. J. Ch. 91; 122 L. T. 307; 84 J. P. 25; 30 T. L. R. 98; 64 Sol. Jo. 131; 18 L. G. R. 73.

674. Persons specified in grant—Specification exhaustive.—Sect. 8 of a private local Act of Parliament enacted that it should be lawful for the persons for the time being empowered by that Act, "to grant leases to lay out & appropriate, etc., any part of the said land & hereditaments thereinbefore authorised to be laid out as, & for a way or ways, street or streets, avenue or avenues, square or squares, passage or passages, sewer or sewers, or other conveniences for the general improvement of the estate, & the accommodation of the tenants & occupiers thereof."

Pltf., tenant for life, had granted certain building leases of, & laid out, a certain roadway on part of the said estate, & granted the use of the said roadway to A. & C., their respective exors., administrators & assigns, servants, tenants or occupiers, for the time being, of certain lands specified & leased to the said A. & C., having a covenant from C. to repair the said roadway, etc. Deft., being a tenant of another part of the estate authorised to be leased by the Act of Parliament, used the said roadway, having no right or authority, from or under pltf. or A. or C., but claiming to use such roadway, he being a tenant of a part of the estate so leased under the Act of Parliament:—Held: he was not authorised to do so, as the way was not public. There was no grant of way over it, nor licence to use it, to him or any one under whom he claimed.—WHITE v. JACKSON (1859), 5 H. & N. 53; 29 L. J. Ex. 105; 1 L. T. 189; 24 J. P. 24; 5 Jur. N. 675. — Or illustrative.—HAMMOND v. PRENTICE BROTHERS, LTD., No. 673, ante.

676. — "Visitors" of grantee—Include pupils.—In 1894, B. granted to deft., her exors., administrators, & assigns, owners for the time being of St. W., " & her & their tenants, visitors, & servants " at her & their will & pleasure to pass & repass on foot over a strip of land between St. W. & a street in the rear of it, to the end & intent that the right of way should be appurtenant to the messuage for all purposes connected with the use, occupation, & enjoyment of the same. Before 1894 & up to the present time L. carried on a girl's school at St. W. to which there was also access from the front, & her pupils used the strip of land to the rear with her consent in coming to & going from school. Pltfs. claimed an injunction against such user by L.'s pupils:—Held: the word "visitors" in the grant ought not to be restricted to those who could come & go as they pleased, but, having regard to the circumstance that the school was so used by the deft. when the grant was made, "visitors" must be given a large interpretation & must include pupils. The explanatory words at the end of the grant, while not operating to enlarge it, might be used for the purpose of interpreting what its meaning was, & there must be a declaration that the way could be used by

SUB-SECT. 3.—NATURE AND EXTENT OF USER.

A. Access to Way.

677. Whether confined to one place.—A public road differs from a private road in this: you make make an opening in your fence & go into it in any part of the length of the public road, or at the end, but in a private road you must go in at the usual & accustomed part (OHAMBRE, J.).—WOODYER v. HADDEN (1813), 5 Taunt. 125; 128 E. R. 634.

678. — Or according to choice of grantee—Special limitation by covenant.—A grant of all ways, privileges, & easements to a certain messuage belonging or appertaining, or usually held, occupied, & enjoyed therewith, coupled with a covenant by the grantor, that he will permit & suffer the grantee at all reasonable times to have free access to certain pleasure walks situate in a different close, subject to such regulations for the general ordering of the walks as the grantor may think proper to make, & that he, the grantor, will keep the walks & the fences & gates belonging to them in good & proper repair & condition, does not confer upon the grantee a right to enter the walks at the specific gateway used by the occupier of the messuage at the time of the grant, so as to hinder the grantor from closing that gateway, & opening a new gate in a different part of the close.—SOMERVILLE (LORD) v. DAWSON (1849), 13 L. T. O. S. 136.

679. — — — — ——Pltfs. & deft. each purchased lands of one W., which were separated by a road over which a right of way reserved to each, the freehold remaining in W., with a joint obligation to repair it. In the conveyance to pltfs., the land purchased by them was described as containing 31 acres or thereabouts, "which with the abutments & boundaries thereof were more particularly described in the map or plan thereof affixed to & forming part of the indenture, together with full & free liberty, licence, & authority for said pltfs., their successors & assigns & tenants, & all persons coming to or going from the same lands & hereditaments, or any part thereof, to use & enjoy, with horses, carts, & carriages, or on foot, jointly or in common with others the person or persons for the time being entitled to the like liberties, licences, & authorities respectively, the roads or ways leading to & from the same lands & hereditaments, as the same roads or ways are described in the said map or plan." At the time of the conveyance, the land so purchased by pltfs. was separated from the road by a hedge in which were two gates, one at the upper, the other at the lower end of the road. Pltfs. removed the hedge, & built a wall with two gates therein, both at some distance from the spot where the old gates had stood. Deft. obstructed the access to these new gates, by excavating the road to the depth of between four & five feet:—Held: deft. was liable to an action at the suit of pltfs.; for, whether they were justified in altering the position of the gates or not, they were still entitled to the uninterrupted use of the way as granted to them. Semble: the grant was a general grant of a right of way along the road & every part thereof, & was not limited to a way through the old gates.—SOUTH METROPOLITAN CEMETERY CO. v. EDEN (1855), 16 C. B. 42; 25 L. T. O. S. 69, 100; 139 E. R. 670.

680. ———.]—Pltf. in 1888 purchased Nos. 1, 2, & 3, H. Cottages, & certain land in the rear thereof, which property was conveyed to him by deed, together with a right of way on foot along the way or passage coloured blue in the plan on the deed, which passage ran from F. Lane along the south side of No. 3 H. Cottages, to the above-mentioned land of pltf. This land was at the date of the conveyance, & had ever since been, used as a nursery garden. The passage was for the greater part of its length about three feet wide, but grew to a width of about ten feet where it reached pltf.'s land, from which a gate about three feet wide opened on to it. Deft. had erected a building, partly on certain adjoining land of his own, & partly on the wider end of the passage, thereby reducing it to a uniform length of about three feet, reducing the frontage of pltf.'s land on the passage by some seven feet, & preventing the erection by pltf. on his land of any greenhouse or other building which could open on the passage by any door unless it occupied the exact site of the three-foot gate:—Held: (1) the grant of the footway was not limited to a way suitable for the occupation of the land as a nursery garden, but gave a right to the reasonable use of the way, & any part of it, for all purposes; (2) pltf.'s mode of access to his land was not limited to the gate, but he was entitled to access at whatever point was most convenient to himself; (3) deft.'s building was a substantial interference with pltf.'s right of way, & a mandatory injunction for its removal must be granted.—SKETCHLEY v. BERGER (1893), 69 L. T. 754.

681. ———.]—COOKE v. INGRAM, No. 521, ante.

682. ———.]—By an indenture made in 1892, the trustees of a settlement under which pltf., then an infant, was tenant in tail male in possession of certain estates, conveyed a farm & lands having a frontage towards the sea, to defts.' predecessors in title. There was reserved to the vendors, including the owner for the time being of the hereditaments remaining subject to the settlement, a right to repurchase part of the land for the purposes of constructing a road & promenade along the sea coast, but the reconveyance of such part was to be subject to a right of way for the purchasers, including persons deriving title under them, over the road & promenade & subject also to an obligation on the repurchasers to erect & maintain a fence, with suitable gates, between the road, & the remainder of the land, the quantity of the land to be thus repurchased,

& the position & character of the fence, & the number, character, & position of the gates, in case the parties should differ about the same, to be settled by arbitration, the arbitrator paying regard to the reasonable requirements & convenience of both parties. By an indenture made in 1907, defts.' predecessors in title reconveyed to pltf., then tenant for life of the hereditaments comprised in the settlement & remaining unsold, a part of the land conveyed by the indenture of 1892, reserving a right of way over such part & the road & promenade intended to be made thereon. The indenture of 1907 contained a covenant by pltf. to erect a fence with gates therein, the character of which was specified in the indenture; & it was agreed that such fence & gates should be accepted in full satisfaction of the obligation to erect a fence with suitable gates contained in the indenture of 1892. The road & promenade, & the fence & gates, specified in the indenture of 1907, had in fact been constructed & provided prior to the execution of such indenture. Subsequently defts. sold a part of the land remaining in them for building purposes & the purchaser requiring them to give him reasonable access to the road, & promenade, they opened a new gate in the fence:—Held: the obligation cast upon pltf. to provide a fence & gates did not operate so as to impose a qualification upon the easement over the road & promenade reserved to defts. & accordingly defts. were entitled to access to the road & promenade at other points besides the site of the gates expressly provided for by the indenture of 1907.—(GULLFORD (EARL) v. ST. GEORGE'S GOLF CLUB TRUST, LTD. (1916), 85 L. J. Ch. 604; 115 L. T. 179; 32 T. L. R. 578.

B. Limitations of User.

(a) Right existing by Grant.

683. Limited by construction of grant.—The owner of field A., who had a right of way over pltf.'s close, for the more convenient use of A., made a gateway from field B. into A., mowed both fields, stacked all the hay in A., & some months after sold the whole hay to deft., who carried it all away over the said way. Pltf. brought an action of trespass, deft. justified under the right of way, & pltf. new assigned excess:—Held: whether there had been an excess of user was not a question of law; but it was a question of fact for the jury whether the stacking & carrying away was a reasonable & proper user of the way for the purposes of field A., or merely colourably so, & really for the purposes of field B.; & on their finding that the former was the case, deft. was entitled to the verdict on the new assignment.

There is a distinction between the case of a right of way by virtue of a grant & that of one established by prescription, by virtue of user; in a grant the language of the deed is to be construed, & in construing it we are not to forget the maxim that we are to presume most strongly against the PART VII. SECT. 6, SUB-SECT. 3.—B. (a).

683 i. Limited by construction of grant.—Where a right of way is granted as appurtenant to certain lands, there is a right of unrestricted user of the way in connection with the beneficial enjoyment of the premises to which it is appurtenant by every part owner of the property, but such part ownership confers no right to further burden the land over which the way exists by using it in connection with other adjoining property to which the privilege is not annexed.—TELFER

v. JACOBS (1888), 16 O. R. 35.—CAN.

683 ii. ———.]—A deed of conveyance of land from pltf. to defts. recited that the latter had determined to construct waterworks in their municipality, & required the land for buildings & other purposes connected with the waterworks, & that pltf. had agreed to sell them such land for such purposes for the consideration & subject to the conditions set forth. The grant was to defts. & their assigns for ever, for the purposes mentioned in the recital, of the land described, with full right of ingress & egress to & from the said lands for defts., their employees & others doing business on & about the said waterworks with teams & otherwise, from a certain street, etc., along a certain road, etc.:—Held: the grant of the right of way gave to defts. & their employees footway, carriage-way, & way for horses, but conferred no right of way upon persons to whom defts. might sell or lease the land.—MCLEAN v. ST. THOMAS CITY (1892), 23 O. R. 114.—CAN.

684. —[.]—Lands were bought by the Crown under an Act enabling the Crown to buy lands for the purpose of fortifications, but providing that the lands were not to be built upon or sold. By an Act authorising a railway to be made through these lands, the railway co. were obliged to make level crossings giving access to part of the lands then a marsh or pasture. The Crown, under the authority of a subsequent Act, sold a part of the lands, & the purchasers proposed to build houses thereon:—Held: the purchasers could build houses thereon, & the occupiers of the houses would be entitled to make use of the level crossings, & an injunction granted against the obstruction of the level crossings, but not so as to prevent the co. from using the railway for the reasonable working of their traffic.

Where a right of way is claimed by user, then, no doubt, . . . the purpose for which the way may be used is limited by the user; for we must judge from the way in which it has been used what the purposes were for which the party claiming has gained the right. But where a right of way is created by grant, or Act of Parliament, then it must depend upon the proper construction of the grant, or Act of Parliament, whether the right of way is to be used for all purposes, or for only limited purposes (MELLISH, L.J.).—UNITED LAND CO. v. 685. —[.]—(1) Deft., the owner of a house with a gateway & a paved road under it leading to a paved yard, & a vacant piece of ground at the rear, agreed to grant to pltf. a lease of the house & vacant ground & the appurtenances, with power to erect on the vacant ground a workshop for the purposes of his business as a gas engineer, & it was stipulated that pltf. should not obstruct the gateway, except for the purposes of ingress & egress. The workshop was erected, & the only access to it by vehicles was through the gateway

& over the yard which were also the only approach to the stables of deft., who carried on business in adjoining premises. Deft.'s vans, before the agreement was entered into, had often stood in the yard when not in use. Pltf. now alleged that deft. blocked up the gateway & yard with his vans, & prevented the access of carts & vehicles to his workshop:—Held: under the agreement, pltf. had an implied right of way through the gateway & over the yard for the reasonable purposes of his business; that such right was general & not restricted; & that he was entitled to an injunction to restrain deft.'s obstruction.

(2) The grant of a right of way per se & nothing else may be a right of footway or it may be a general right of way, that is a right of way not only for people on foot but for people on horseback, for carts carriages & other vehicles, which it is a question of construction of the grant, & that construction will of course depend on the circumstances surrounding, so to speak, the execution of the instrument (JESSEL, M.R.).

Prima facie the grant of a right of way is the grant of a right of way having regard to the nature of the road over which it is granted, & the purpose for which it is intended to be used (JESSEL, M.R.).—CANNON v. 686. —[.]—NEW WINDSOR CORPN. v. STOVELL, No. 148, ante.

687. —[.]—A railway was constructed in 1847, passing through certain lands from west to east & thereby cutting off all access from the land on the north of the line to a public road which was diverted further south. On the sale of a portion of the land for the purposes of the railway the conveyance was followed by a grant to the landowners of a right of way over a level crossing "for themselves, their agents, servants & workpeople on foot or on horseback, & with carts, carriages, horses & other animals," subject to the co.'s bye-laws relating to level crossings, "for the commodious use of the same crossing & the safe occupation of the lands thereto adjoining." The construction of the level crossing restored the access to the diverted public road which the railway had cut off. For many years the crossing had only been used for agricultural purposes, but the owner of the land on the north of the railway having opened sandpits on his lands, a much greater use of the crossing was made, & a traffic of a commercial character grew up. The railway co. brought an action to restrain deft. from using or allowing the crossing to be used in excess of the way in which it was used for agricultural purposes at the time of the grant:—Held: (1) the level crossing having been made for the purpose not only of joining severed parcels of land, but to provide access to a public road, & the grant being in wide terms, it was not a mere accommodation work or way for agricultural purposes, but a right of way for all purposes not incompatible with the running of trains on the railway; (2) it was not in the circumstances ultra vires of the railway co.

Measure of enjoyment—Fixed at time of grant.—The nature of the enjoyment of an easement, at the time of the grant, is the proper measure of enjoyment during the continuance of the grant.—HEWARD v. JACKSON (1874), 21 Gr. 263.—CAN.

—Deft., the owner of a building estate, conveyed to the predecessor in title of pltf. one of the plots of ground on the estate, & in the conveyance granted to him the right for himself, his heirs, etc., to pass over the several roads made or to be made through the estate, in the same manner & as fully as if the same roads were public roads. Two of the roads on the estate were forty feet wide, twenty feet in the middle being gravelled for cart & carriage traffic, & there being a strip of grass ten feet wide on either side. Pltf., in common with other residents on the estate, was accustomed to walk along these grass strips to & from his house, which was built on the plot of ground so conveyed as above stated. Deft. caused six ditches or trenches, each about fifteen inches wide & ten inches deep, to be cut completely across the strips of grassland at the side of the road near pltf.'s house, the earth taken out of the ditches being banked up at the edges of the ditches, & pltf.'s passage along the strips was thereby rendered difficult & dangerous. Pltf. claimed an injunction against deft. to restrain the continuance of the impediments to his right of way. Deft. contended that pltf.'s right of way was the same as that of the public along a highway.

Sect. 6.—User and enjoyment of rights of way: Sub-sect. 3, B. (d) & (e) i. & ii.

& that public ways had similar ditches or trenches cut through the grass at their sides for drainage & similar purposes, & it was proved that in many rural roads in the district such ditches or "grips" were made:—Held: (1) the right of the public to use a highway extends to the whole road, & not merely to the part used as via trita; (2) these ditches if cut on a public highway would have amounted to a nuisance & obstruction, & therefore, as plffs. had the same rights over the road as the public would have over a public highway, he was entitled to the injunction.—*NICOL v. (e) Purposes of Dominant Tenement.
i. In General.

702. General rule.—In 1891 certain premises, coloured pink on the plan on the deed, were conveyed to M., together with a right of way over land coloured yellow on the plan on the deed. The land coloured yellow was subsequently conveyed to J., who covenanted to permit the use of the right of way. M. owned adjoining land, coloured blue on the plan, which abutted on a public highway & on which was a public-house, & erected assembly rooms partly on the land to which there was a right of way & partly on the adjoining land. The licensing magistrates objected to a gateway opening on the right of way, but in 1892 a wall was built with an opening for a gateway 6 ft. 9 in. wide, this opening being temporarily closed with sliding scaffold boards. In 1894 the hereditaments formerly belonging to M. were sold to F., together with the right of way, & in Dec. of that year the scaffold boards were removed to enable building material to be taken along the right of way. In 1896 a further application to the magistrates to allow gates to be placed at the gateway was refused, & the magistrates insisted on the gateway being bricked up.

In 1898 the premises, together with the right of way, were conveyed to G. In 1903 an opening was made in the wall & a gate 4 ft. 4 in. wide placed there, & materials for altering the premises were conveyed along the right of way. It was now proposed to sever the assembly rooms from the public-house, & to use them for a factory, the only access to which was over the right of way.

The present owners of the land coloured yellow contended that the right of way had been abandoned; or, if not, if it was used to buildings not wholly erected on the dominant tenement, that the proposed user was excessive:—Held: there had been no abandonment of the right of way; but (2) the intended use would be an excessive user of the right of way.

A right of way of this sort restricts the owner of the dominant tenement to the legitimate user of his right, & the ct. will not allow that which is in its nature a burden on the owner of the servient tenement to be increased without his consent & beyond the terms of the grant. I do not think that it makes any difference whether the right of way arises by prescription or grant. The burden imposed on the servient tenement must not be increased by allowing the owner of the dominant tenement to make a use of the way in excess of

706. Whether user bonâ fide for dominant tenement—Question for jury.—A right of way appurtenant to land passes to the tenant by a parol demise of the land, though nothing is said about it at the time of the demise. A. having a right of way to a close, demised the close to B. The latter, being possessed of an adjoining close, upon which he was erecting certain houses, used the way for carting building materials to A.'s close for the purpose of using them upon his own land:—Held: it was properly left to the jury to say whether B.'s use of the road was a bonâ fide exercise of the right of way to A.'s close, or a mere colourable mode of getting to his own land.—SKULL v. GLENISTER (1864), 16 C. B. N. S. 81; 3 New Rep. 389; 33 L. J. C. P. 185; 9 L. T. 763; 12 W. R. 554; 143 E. R. 1055.

708. Accommodation way—No right to lay tramways.—An estate was intersected by a canal under the powers of its Act, & an accommodation bridge was built by the co., over which a private road, leading across the property to a high road, was carried. Coal pits were opened upon the estate, which, when the canal was made, had been used as a farm. For some time the coals were carried down to the canal by a tramway which did not cross the bridge. The coal owners subsequently carried the tramway across the bridge, excavating the soil of the roadway on the bridge & approaches, in order to carry their coals to a line of railway on the other side of the property. An action for trespass having been commenced, & a writ of injunction applied for by the canal company, the coal owners submitted in the action to judgment for £1 damages & costs, & gave an undertaking not to repeat the trespass complained of. The coal owners having a few months afterwards again laid down the tramway, but without breaking the soil on the bridge:—Held: independently of the undertaking in the action, by which the right of the canal co. had been recognised & established, defts.' right of access to & passage over the accommodation bridge did not justify the making by them of a tramway upon the bridge & the approaches thereto, & injunction granted accordingly.—*NEATH CANAL CO. v. 710. — Minerals.]—(1) By a deed dated 1630, W. & T. conveyed to L. & H. in fee-farm, certain lands in the township of A., "excepting always & reserved out of the grant all mines of coal within the fields & territories of A. aforesaid, together with sufficient way-leave & stay-leave to & from the said mines, with liberty of sinking & digging pit & pits." The grantors covenanted for themselves, their heirs & assigns, "to give & yield to the said L. & H., their heirs & assigns, such accustomed recompense for digging & breaking the ground with the fields & territories of A. aforesaid, in which any pit or pits for the getting of coal should thereafter happen to be sunk & wrought as formerly had been usually given & allowed there in like cases before." By a similar deed of the same date the same grantors conveyed lands in an adjoining township to other persons, B. & P., with a similar exception, reservation & covenant:—Held: it was not to be confined to such ways only as were in use at the time of the grant, & in such a direction as was then convenient, but under the reservation in the conveyance of lands in A., the coal owners had no right to carry coals got in H. over lands in A., although from part of the same mineral field.

(2) In an action of trespass for making a railway over ptlf.'s close, defts. justified under the above reservation of a way-leave; ptlf. new assigned that the trespasses were committed on other & different occasions, & for other & different purposes, & to a greater extent than was necessary, & in other parts of the close. To this deft. suffered judgment by default:—Held: on these pleadings it was not competent for ptlf. to contend that some species of railway was not within the reservation, but the question was, whether the direction or mode of construction of the railway were authorised by the reservation; that is, such as were reasonably sufficient for the purpose of getting the coal.

Qu.: whether this reservation of a sufficient way-leave in 1630 gives a right now to make a railway, with cuttings, embankments & fences, so as to oust the occupier of the soil.—DAND v. KINGSCOTE (1840), 6 M. & W. 174; 2 Ry. & Can. Cas. 27; 9 L. J. Ex. 279; 151 E. R. 370.

714. — — — Over level crossing.]—Under Railways (Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845 (c. 20), for the construction by a railway co. of "accommodation works" for the benefit of a landowner whose land is severed by the railway, the landowner is entitled to a convenient passage over the railway sufficient to make good, so far as possible, any interruption which the construction of the railway causes by severance in the working or use of his land, including any alteration or extension of that working or use which could or ought to have been contemplated by the parties when the accommodation works were made & accepted. A railway severed the land of a landowner & crossed on the level a road belonging to him upon which he had a tramway by which goods & traffic from his land were conveyed to a neighbouring port. He had also allowed coals to be conveyed along the tramway to the port from a colliery not situate on his land. On the occasion of the purchase by the railway co. of the portion of the road crossed by the railway & of other land belonging to him taken by the co. the co. entered into an agreement with him that they would construct & maintain certain works "for the accommodation of the owners & occupiers for the time being of the lands adjoining the railway." These works included a level crossing for the tramway. The level crossing was constructed, & the co. entered into a deed of covenant with the landowner in accordance with the agreement. The landowner's successor in title afterwards claimed to be entitled to convey over the level crossing goods & traffic brought on to her land from other places, whether situate on her estate or not:—Held: she was not entitled to use the level crossing for the purpose of conveying goods & traffic so as substantially to increase the burden of the easement by altering or enlarging its character, nature, or extent as enjoyed at or previously to the date of the deed of covenant, or

(2) Plffs. took issue upon a plea traversing the whole right claimed in the declaration. The right actually interfered with was that of carrying away manure with a wheelbarrow:—Held: assuming this privilege to be covered by the grant, plffs. could not, by proving so much of the alleged right, entitle themselves to a verdict on the issue generally.

“Leading” implies drawing in a carriage. Plffs. admit that they have no right to “lead” in that sense (PATERSON, J.).

c. Alleyway—Whether right to carry coals.—A store, two rooms & cellar connected with the store by hatchway & stairs were leased to plffs., “with the privileges & appurtenances thereunto belonging.” The rooms communicated with the store, & a door in one of the rooms opened off an alleyway leading from the street to the rear of the premises. A coal chute to the cellar also opened off the alleyway, which was sufficiently wide to allow coal being carted to the chute. The alleyway was part of the lot upon which the demised premises were, & was in the ownership & possession of def. lessor at the date of the lease. For many years previous to the lease the door off the alleyway had been used

734. — — — — ——Unless a tithe owner has a right of way to carry tithe off titheable lands within his parish, by grant of the owner of the fee or by prescription, he has prima facie only a right to use such road for that purpose as is used at the time by the occupier to carry off the other nine-tenths; & if he has any further right to use any other way from the particular close, because used by the occupier for other agricultural purposes, or for more convenient use of the close, though not for the purpose of carrying off the crop, that right can only exist while such way continues, without being stopped up by the occupier.—*JAMES v. C. Alteration of Dominant Tenement.

735. Whether corresponding alteration of user permissible—Interpretation of grant.—A deed reserved to def. a right of way over a yard “to the stable & loft over the same, & the space or opening under the loft, & now used as a woodhouse,” & also the use of the yard “in common with plff. & his tenants for the time being, it being the intent that the whole of the yard should lie open & undivided as the same then was, without any other building to be erected thereon, & the yard should be used in common by the occupiers of plff.’s & def.’s messuages, in the same manner as the tenants thereof had been accustomed to use the same.”

Def. converted the loft & the space thereunder, which had been used as a woodhouse, into a cottage:—Held: (1) the deed did not justify def. in using the yard after the cottage was built, for that such a user was not the accustomed user which had been reserved; (2) the reservation of the way “to the space or opening under the loft, & now used as a woodhouse,” was to be taken as identifying the locality, & confining the way to a piece of open ground generally, & not specifically to a woodhouse; but that the conversion of the open space to a cottage was an alteration of substance, & def. had no right of way to the cottage.—*ALLAN v. The owner of one of the allotments commenced building houses upon it, & began to lay down a metalled road where there had only been an ordinary cart track over the adjoining allotments:—Held: the allottees were not confined to the use of the road for agricultural purposes only, but were entitled to construct a substantial road way suitable for the purposes to which the land was now in course of being applied.

It is said the provision that the allottees shall do as little damage as may be to the soil or the corn, grass, or herbage, prohibits what is now being done. . . . It appears to me that these words by no means limit the right of the grantee to use the way for all reasonable purposes (JESSEL, M.R.).

It was conceded to be the principle of law that the grantee of a right of way has a right to enter upon the land of the grantor over which the way extends for the purpose of making the grant effective, that is, to enable him to exercise the right granted to him. That includes not only keeping the road in repair but the right of making a road (JESSEL, M.R.).—NEWCOMEN v. COULSON (1877), 5 Ch. D. 133; 46 L. J. Ch. 459; 30 L. T. 385; 25 W. R. 469, C. A.

741. ———. Grant of unrestricted use.]—

Where there is an express grant of a private right of way to a particular place to the unrestricted use of which the grantee of the right of way is entitled, the grant is not to be restricted to access to the land for purposes for which access would be required at the time of the grant. By an inclosure award a road was set out as a carriage road & drift way from a highway to certain of the inclosed lands. Defts., a railway co., acquired some of these lands, & built a cattle pen thereon adjoining their railway, & used the road for the passage to & from the highway of cattle that were to be or had been conveyed on their railway, such user being much greater than the user at the time of the grant, which was exclusively for agricultural purposes:—Held: this was a lawful user on their part, & they were not restricted to the user which existed at the time of the grant.—*FINCH v. —Such increase a question of fact.]—Where a level crossing has been made under sect. 68 of Railway Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845 (c. 20), to connect agricultural lands severed by a railway, the landowner's future user of the crossing is not restricted to the purposes, such as agricultural purposes, for which it was used at the time the railway was constructed; but he is not entitled to use it so as substantially to increase the burden of the easement by altering or enlarging its character, nature, or extent as enjoyed at that time. Whether the change of user increases the burden is a question of fact in each case.

For many years after the time it was made an agricultural level crossing was used for the occasional passage of sheep & cattle, the keys of the gates being borrowed from a neighbouring signalman, who kept the signals at danger till the animals had crossed.

The neighbourhood having changed its agricultural character, the landowner let a field to a tennis club, who claimed the gates & used the crossing daily in large numbers. It was proved that this user was exceedingly dangerous to the club members, & would subject the railway co. to a greatly increased strain & burden in watching their line & managing their traffic so as to avoid accidents:—Held: this user was unlawful, & would, if necessary, be restrained by injunction.—*TAFF VALE RY. 759. General rule.]—Case for obstructing a right of way between two specified termini over a close called the Terrace Walk. The way was claimed as appurtenant to a messuage, in general terms, without reference to any obligation to repair. On the trial of an issue joined on a traverse of the right of way, the easement proved was a right to pass forwards & backwards over every part of the close, & not merely between the termini specified in the declaration; & it was shown that the easement was enjoyed under a grant thereof to D., his heirs, tenants & assigns, & to certain other persons, "he, they & every of them, from time to time, contributing & paying a ratable share & proportion towards repairing & amending the Terrace Walk":—Held: (1) no variance, the easement proved being only larger than the easement alleged, & not different in kind; (2) the obligation to repair was not in the nature of a condition precedent, & need not be alleged in the declaration.

The easement was granted in 1675; there was evidence that, for ten years next before the commencement of the action, part of the way claimed had become public:—Held: (3) it was not necessary to state in the declaration that such part had become public.

That [the liability to repair] is not a condition incident by law to the grant of a right of way: it is not even an obligation to which the grantee is subject: it is no more than this that if he wants the way to be repaired he must repair it himself

764. — — — — ——It is clear that, as a general rule, the grant of an easement imposes no obligation on the owner of the servient tenement to do anything in the nature of repair. Anything that may be requisite for the enjoyment of the easement by way of repair must be done by the owner of the dominant tenement for himself; but the statement of the law on the subject by LORD MANSFIELD in Taylor v. Whitehead, No. 765, post, which was referred to by BOWEN, L.J., in Miller v. Hancock, No. 763, ante, is to the effect that, though by the common law he who has the use of a thing ought to repair it, the grantor may bind himself. Therefore we start in such a case with the position that, unless there be circumstances which point to the contrary conclusion, any repair which may be necessary, would have to be done by the tenants. It was, however, pointed out in Miller v. Hancock, No. 763, ante, that there may be cases in which, either by express agreement or by necessary implication, the landlord of premises, let as these were, contracts with the tenants to do any repairs which may be necessary, or possibly to do something more than repairs; but it appears to me that, unless such a contract could be shown to have been made by the landlord, either in express terms or by necessary implication, there would be no duty cast upon the landlord in such a case to repair (SIR GORELL BARNES, P.).—HUGGETT v. MIERS, [1908] 2 K. B. 278; 77 L. J. K. B. 710; 99 L. T. 326; 24 T. L. R. 582; 52 Sol. Jo. 481, C. A.

765. Liability of grantee—At common law.—

(1) It is not a good justification in trespass that deft. has a right of way over part of pltf.'s land, & that he had gone over the adjoining land, because the way was impassable from being overflowed by a river.

(2) I entirely agree that by common law he who has the use of a thing ought to repair it. The grantor may bind himself; but here he has not done it (LORD MANSFIELD, C.J.).

If this had been a way of necessity the question would have required consideration; but it is not so pleaded (BULLER, J.).—TAYLOR v. WHITEHEAD (1781), 2 Doug. K. B. 745; 99 E. R. 475.

771. Liability of occupier of servient tenement.—

In an action on the case for not repairing a private road leading through deft.'s close, it is sufficient for pltf. to allege that deft. as occupier of the close is bound to repair. But if the deft. prescribe in right of his own estate, he must show the estate in right of which he claims the privilege.—RIDER v. SMITH (1790), 3 Term Rep. 766; 100 E. R. 848.

g. Liability of grantee.—Pltf.'s predecessors in title had granted to deft.'s predecessors in title a right of way over land afterwards conveyed to pltf., such right of way being conditioned upon the grantees thereof "fencing & keeping in repair" the roadway over which the easement was granted. Shortly afterwards the grantees fenced the sides of the roadway, & put gates at each end of it, which, after remaining many years, rotted away.—Held: the right of way was dependent upon deft.'s maintaining fences not merely at the sides of the way in question, but also at the ends of it, where there might be gates as part of the fences.—CLENDENAN v. BLATCHFORD (1888), 15 O. R. 285.—CAN.

PART VII. SECT. 6. SUB-SECT. 3.—D. (b).

760 l. Right of grantee to repair.—E., owning land through which V. Street ran part of the way, from north to south, conveyed to pltf. four acres south of that street, "with the exception of continuing V. Street across said lot." Afterwards E. conveyed to W. by a statutory deed 65 acres adjoining pltf.'s land on the south & W. conveyed to deft.—Held: by the deed to pltf. the continuation of V. Street was excepted out of the land conveyed; this continuation was, when E. conveyed to W., a way actually used across pltf.'s land to W.'s land, & so passed by the deed to W. & from him to deft., who was therefore not liable in trespass for entering to repair the way.—HEBNER v. WILLIAMSON (1880), 44 U. C. R. 593.—CAN.

f. Liability of grantor—By agreement—Subsequent performance rendered illegal.—In 1911, deft. conveyed to G. land in a village together with a right of way over a road. In the deed of conveyance deft. covenanted "to maintain the said road & bridges thereon in as good condition as the same are now." In 1913, G. conveyed a portion of the land to pltf. The road having ceased to exist by reason of the encroachment of the waters of Lake Erie, this action was brought for a declaration that deft. was bound by his covenant to restore the road & for damages for breach of the covenant in not maintaining the road.—Held: the legal effect of the encroachment was to vest in the Crown the soil thus covered by water; deft. had no right to rebuild the road; & subsequent events having rendered the performance of the covenant illegal, deft. was excused from performing it.

773. ——— Right against grantor.]—(1) The grantee of a right of way which has been obstructed by the grantor has a right to deviate over the grantor's land.

(2) The grantee is entitled to have this right protected by the ct. so long as the obstruction exists, without the necessity of proceeding against the grantor for the removal of the obstruction.

(3) Notice of a right of way, & also of an obstruction to it, is also notice of the grantee's right of deviation.

(4) The grantor of a right of way over a towing path along a private canal built a bridge over the canal, which entirely blocked up the towing path, & obliged the grantee to go through the grantor's land around the foot of the bridge in order to rejoin the towing path. Purchasers from the grantor of the land over which this right of way existed, attempted to prevent the grantee from using the substituted way which the building of the bridge had obliged him to use:—Held: the grantee was entitled to an injunction restraining the purchasers from interfering with his use of the substituted way; but the injunction must be limited to the period during which the obstruction of the towing path by the bridge might continue & was not to extend so as to authorise the grantee to use the substituted way for any other purpose than towing barges.

(5) We think that defts. who purchased from the grantor with notice have no better right as against pltf. than the grantor himself would have had (LORD SELBORNE, C.).—SELBY v. NETTLEFOLD (1873), 9 Ch. App. 111; 43 L. J. Ch. 359; 29 L. T. 661; 38 J. P. 404; 22 W. R. 142, L. C. & L. J.

By agreement between pltf.'s predecessor in title & the railway co. this level crossing was closed by the railway co. Defts. finding that this obstruction existed, went over land belonging to pltf., whereupon pltf. sued them for trespass:—Held: the action failed, inasmuch as pltf., being a party to the closing up of the right of way, could not complain of defts.' deviating on to his land in order to get past the obstruction.—STACEY v. SHERRIN (1913), 29 T. L. R. 555, D. C.

Where a right of way was expressed to be "through the gateway" of pltf., which gateway led to other premises of pltf., & at the time of the lease, carts could come in to load & unload, & turn round, & go out again, but, through alterations of the premises, could not now do so without slightly trenching upon pltf.'s premises:—Held: (1) in the reasonable use of the right of way defts. had a right to do this; & (2) what was a reasonable user was for the jury.—HAWKINS v. CARBINES (1857), 27 L. J. Ex. 44.

Plea to the new assignment, pltf. obstructed the way in the first plea mentioned, by digging a trench across the same, & because deft. could not remove the obstruction, he did, for the purpose of avoiding the same, & using the way, depart out of the same, along the said other portion of the close in the new assignment mentioned, & because the said fences in the new assignment mentioned were standing on a portion of the close in the new assignment mentioned, & that without breaking or damaging the same he could not go over the residue of the said close in which, etc., he did necessarily a little break & damage the said fences, etc. Replication, de injuria:—Held: (1) the right of way stated in the plea to the declaration was not admitted by pltf. in his new assignment; (2) the right being re-asserted, though informally, in the plea to the new assignment, it was put in issue by the replication, so as to throw the onus of proving it on deft.—ROBERTSON v. GANTLETT (1847), 16 M. & W. 289; 4 Dow. & L. 548; 16 L. J. Ex. 156; 8 L. T. O. S. 368; 153 E. R. 1198.

mtgee. in fee. The conveyance, to which deft. & the mtgor. were both parties, contained a grant of a right of way in these terms: "Together with full & free right & liberty for the grantee, his heirs, etc., at all times & for all purposes, etc., with or without horses, carriages, etc., to pass & re-pass over & along the roads or intended roads & ways delineated in the plan," & also a covenant by deft. that he had not "done, omitted, or knowingly suffered or been party or privy to anything whereby the premises conveyed, or any part thereof, were or might be impeached, affected, or incumbered in title, estate, or otherwise howsoever, or whereby he was in any wise hindered from granting & releasing the same premises, or any part thereof, in manner aforesaid." Another plot had previously been sold to A. In the conveyance to A., to which deft. as mtgee. was a party, the mtgor. covenanted with A. that he would at his own expense "pave & complete & make fit for use, & at all times maintain in good repair, a private road, & will make such road of a width of not less than forty feet throughout its entire length." This was the road over which a right of way was granted to pltf. in his conveyance. In this deed was also a proviso that it should be lawful for A. "to erect & maintain a porte-cochere or projection extending over the foot pavement of the said private road, provided that the plan thereof be submitted to the mtgor., & approved of by him." This portico when finished projected about two feet into the carriage way of the private road, but there was ample space left for the convenient enjoyment by pltf. of the way granted to him:—Held: (1) there being no substantial interference with the right of way or easement granted to pltf., he was not entitled to maintain an action against deft. upon his covenant; (2) if there had been such interference with any right of pltf., however small the damage, deft. was sufficiently a "party or privy" to the conveyance to A. as to have rendered him liable.—CLIFFORD v. HOARE (1874), 1 L. R. 9 C. P. 362; 43 L. J. C. P. 225; 30 L. T. 465; 22 W. R. 828.

784. ———.]—Where a right of way over land laid out as a roadway is granted or reserved to the owner of adjoining land as appurtenant thereto & to every part thereof, he is not entitled to have the roadway left unfenced for ever, but to reasonable access to the roadway. In the case of a public highway any appreciable obstruction is actionable; but to enable the grantee of a private right of way to prevent the erection of a gate across the way he must show it will be a substantial obstruction to his easement.

to the north of the land so granted, reserving to himself, his heirs & assigns, owner or owners, of a messuage & land adjoining the blue land on the north, & his & their tenants & servants & all other persons authorised in that behalf by him & them, from time to time & at all times & for all purposes, to pass & repass, with or without animals, carts & carriages over & along a road ten feet wide covenanted to be made by pltf. on the blue land; & pltf. by the same deed, as beneficial owner granted to deft. in fee simple the same right of way "as appurtenant to the same land & every part thereof." Pltf. made the ten foot road on the blue land, deft.'s fence along the middle of it being moved back to the boundary of his own land on the north. Deft. built shops on his land & at the south-east corner thereof removed his fence for some sixteen feet along the roadway, so placing his shop frontage at this point that he left a triangular piece of his own land vacant, & bounded on one side by the frontage, on another by a public highway, & on the third side by the sixteen feet of blue road. Pltf. then put a railway along this sixteen feet & erected a gate across the eastern entrance from the highway to the blue road. Deft. promptly removed both railway & gate:—Held: (1) this was a private right of way; (2) it had not been substantially interfered with, & pltf. was entitled to erect a gate, which, however, must be kept open during business hours & must never be locked; (3) deft. was entitled only to reasonable access to the blue road, & pltf. was entitled to erect a fence with a gate in it along the sixteen feet.—PETLEY v. PARSONS, [1914] 2 Ch. 653; 84 L. J. Ch. 81; 111 L. T. 1011; 30 T. L. R. 655; 58 Sol. Jo. 721, C. A.

785. ——— Disturbance in fact—Not amounting to inconvenience.—In an action on the case for obstructing a private right of way for husbandry purposes, the jury found that the way was narrowed, but not to the inconvenience of pltf.:—Held: that finding amounted to a verdict for deft. upon "Not guilty."

The real effect of the finding is, that pltf.'s right has not been obstructed. He has a right to go over deft.'s close, & that right he has continued to exercise. He had no right to go over every part of the close, or even every part which he had gone over before, unless that part was specifically given to him (DENMAN, C.J.).—GREEN v. SOUTH (1848), 12 L. p. ——— Erection of fence—With reasonable gateways.—The owner of an allotment in a residential suburb, was proceeded against by the owner of the adjoining allotment. Deft.'s land adjoined a lane on complainant's land, & deft. was entitled to a right of way over the lane. Complainant sought an order for the construction of a fence along the boundary. Deft. objected that the erection would obstruct the right claimed by deft. to enter on the lane at any & every point:—Held: an undertaking being given by complainant to allow any reasonable gateways in the fence, such fence would not constitute any substantial interference with deft.'s easement.—ROSE v. CORDEN, [1921] V. L. R. 617.—AUS.

q. ——— Erection of gates.—An arrangement made between pltf. & B., whereby the latter "was allowed to go through" pltf.'s land, was superseded by an arrangement whereby, property of M. P. & M. agreed to alter their boundary, & substitute a new passage for the old one. M. accordingly conveyed to P. a small strip of land reaching across the end of the new passage where it entered the yard, & granted to P., his heirs, etc., "rights of way at all times & for all purposes along a passage intended to run between the piece of land hereinbefore conveyed & a street called T." By another deed, P. released his rights of way over the old passage. Pltf. was a lessee of the inn & yard under P. Defts. were tenants of M., occupying warehouses on his property, & the bill was filed to prevent defts. from allowing carts & waggons to remain stationary in the passage in course of loading & unloading, so as to obstruct the access to the yard:—Held: (2) the necessity of the business of defts. did not give them any right to occupy the passage by stationary obstructions when any other person having a right of way required to pass; (3) the right of way was not a right in gross, but was appurtenant to the property occupied by pltf., so that his lease gave him a right to the enjoyment of it.

790. By consent—Laying down gas pipes—On request of grantees.—Occupation roads laid out through an estate for the use & convenience of the inhabitants are not thereby dedicated to the public. An estate was purchased for the purpose of building houses; a part was laid out as private roads, & upon a partition, the owners taking the roads covenanted that the other freeholders & the occupiers of the houses should have the full use & enjoyment of the roads in as absolute a manner as if they were public roads:—Held: a request to be supplied with gas by a minority of the occupiers of houses was sufficient, without the consent of the freeholders, to justify the breaking up the roads by the gas co. to lay down their pipes to comply with such request. On appeal the decision was affirmed, as every occupier had the same right, for the purpose of his use & enjoyment, to call in all such aid as he might have done if the roads had been public roads.—SELBY v. CRYSTAL PALACE GAS CO. (1862), 4 De G. F. & J. 246; 31 L. J. Ch. 595; 6 L. T. 790; 26 J. P. 676; 8 Jur. N. S. 830; 10 W. R. 636; 45 E. R. 1178, L. J.J.

791. On compulsory purchase—Substitution of other way—Relative convenience of old & new way—Railways Clauses Act, 1845 (c. 20), s. 53.—By a special Act incorporating Railway Clauses Act, 1845 (c. 20), a ry. co. were authorised to widen their existing railway, & on the parliamentary plans the existing line of railway was delineated, & there were dotted lines on either side indicating the limits of deviation. The co. constructed a portion of their widening outside the limits shown by one of the dotted lines & upon land taken by them from pltf., who brought this action against them for an injunction, but did not show that he had sustained any special damage by reason of their acts.

It is competent to the ry. co. to take land for the purpose of making a substituted way. That has been decided in years gone by. The present way is in some places narrower than it was before, & it is said not to be so convenient as before; but if it is sufficiently wide for the purpose for which it exists—that is to say, to let a horse go to & from the stable—that would seem to satisfy pltf.'s right. There is no absolute right to seven feet all the way along; & when you look at the above sect. it amounts to this: it is drawn in such a way that there is a certain latitude in giving the substituted way. It is to be "as convenient as the former, or as near as may be." The learned judge has found as a fact that this is a sufficiently convenient way, & I see no reason to differ from him on that ground. It might have been straighter or more convenient, but still it is a reasonable way, & as good as the co. can give under the circumstances (LINDLEY, L.J.).—*FINCH v. LONDON & SOUTH WESTERN RY. Pltf. subsequently erected three additional gates along the course of the right of way, which were not necessary for the enjoyment of the land. 795. —.]—On a private road leading to a county lunatic asylum, along which persons had been accustomed to pass by the leave of the owners, & were likely to continue to pass, deft. being about to build, received leave to place materials, & in pursuance thereof placed his materials in such a way as to obstruct the road & to make it dangerous to persons using it, & did not give notice to such persons by signal or otherwise. An injury having been caused thereby to the horse of pltf. while lawfully using the road:—Held: (1) deft. was liable to an action by pltf. for the injury sustained; (2) it was not necessary to aver in the declaration that the materials were so placed by deft. without the permission of the owners & occupiers of the soil, as such allegation would raise an immaterial issue.

(3) If this way had been a public highway, & deft. had placed an obstruction upon it, no action would have lain for that unless some individual had sustained an injury therefrom. It seems to me that the rule of law is precisely the same in respect of a private way, whether by prescription or by license. If the exercise of that right be obstructed, the party injured thereby has a right of action, just the same as if the way had been a public one. The qualification of the license set up by deft. was introduced by the jury: I did not put it to them; for, I did not consider it any part of the case. If the obstruction was placed upon the road with the unqualified leave of the owners where it entered the county road, pltf. erected a gate for the convenient use of his holding. Dft. was allowed free ingress & egress through the gate:—Held: no obstruction of the right of way.—FLYNN v. HARTE, [1913] 2 I. R. 322.—IR.

810. ——— Permanency of obstruction.—By a particular sect. of the Act of Incorporation of a railway co. the owners of lands adjoining the line were empowered to lay down or extend either upon their own lands or on lands on the side thereof belonging to the co., or upon the lands of any other persons, with the consent of such other persons, any collateral or continuous branch from such respective lands, etc., to communicate with the railway for the purpose of bringing carriages upon or across the same. Pltf. in 1839 with the assent of the co. made a siding on his land connecting the railway with a wharf, part of which was in his own occupation & other part in that of certain tenants; & down to 1857 the co. carried coals & other goods for pltf. & his tenants, placing the trucks on the siding & so sending them down to the wharf. In the course of that year, however, the co., with a view, as the jury thought of diverting the trade from pltf.'s wharf to another wharf in which they were interested, gave pltf. notice under another sect. of their Act that after Sept. 30 they would no longer provide him with locomotive power for the conveyance of his goods along their line, & on Oct. 1 they placed carriages & other things across the junction for the purpose, as the jury found, of permanently obstructing & preventing pltf. & his tenants having access to the wharf by means of their railway. Neither pltf. nor his tenants had availed themselves at this time of the authority given to them by the Act of Parliament to provide locomotive power of their own, & consequently they were not in a position to be actually obstructed. The tenants, however, finding their trade destroyed, removed from pltf.'s wharf & carried their business to the co.'s wharf:—Held: these wrongful acts of the co. constituted such a permanent obstruction & injury to pltf.'s right to the use of his siding as to entitle him as a reversioner to maintain an action.—*BELL v. too late to object after the trial that such evidence was not receivable.—TEED v. BEBBER (1858), 2 Thom. 426.—CAN.

SECT. 1.—IN GENERAL.

829. ———.] — In considering whether an obstruction to ancient lights amounts to an actionable nuisance, the test is not whether so much light has been taken as materially to lessen the enjoyment & use of the house that its owner previously had, but whether so much is left as is enough for the comfortable use & enjoyment of the house according to the ordinary requirements of mankind.

Apart from express contract or grant, the owner of a house has no right to any access of light to the windows thereof over his neighbour's land until he has acquired it by prescription, or under the Act. When he has so acquired it, he has a house with an easement of light attached to it. Any substantial interference with his comfortable use & enjoyment of his house, according to the usages of ordinary persons in that locality, is actionable as a nuisance at common law. . . . The dominant owner was never entitled either by prescription or under the Act to all the light that came through his windows. It was not enough to show that some light had been taken, but the question always was whether so much had been taken as to cause a nuisance. . . . It is still, as it always has been, a question of nuisance or no nuisance, but the test of nuisance is not—How much light has been taken, & is that enough materially to lessen the enjoyment & use of the house that its owner previously had? but—How much is left, & is that enough for the comfortable use & enjoyment of the house according to the ordinary requirements of mankind (FARWELL, J.).—HIGGINS v. BETTS, [1905] 2 Ch. 210; 74 L. J. Ch. 621; 92 L. T. 850; 53 W. R. 549; 21 T. L. R. 552; 49 Sol. Jo. 535.

SECT. 2.—NATURE OF EASEMENT.

830. Definition.—(1) To constitute an actionable obstruction of ancient lights it is not enough that the light is less than before. There must be a substantial privation of light, enough to render the occupation of the house uncomfortable according to the ordinary notions of mankind &, in the case of business premises, to prevent pltf. from carrying on his business as beneficially as before.

(2) The nature of the right to light & of an infringement was not altered by Prescription Act, 1832 (c. 71).

A period of twenty years' enjoyment as specified in the above Act of the access & use of light to a building creates an absolute & indefeasible right immediately on the expiration of the period of twenty years. . . . The period is not a period in gross, but a period next before some suit or action wherein the claim or matter to which such period may relate shall have been or shall be brought into question (LORD MACNAGHTEN).

(3) The test of the right is, I think, whether the obstruction complained of is a nuisance, &, as it appears to me, the value of the test makes the amount of right acquired depend upon the surroundings & circumstances of light coming from other sources, as well as the question of the proximity of the premises complained of. . . . In each of such cases it becomes a question of degree, & the question is in each case whether it amounts to a nuisance which will give a right of action (LORD HALSBURY, C.).

(4) The right of a person who is owner or occupier of a building with windows, privileged as ancient lights, in regard to the protection of the light coming to those windows, is a purely legal right. It is an easement belonging to the class known as negative easements. It is nothing more nor less than the right to prevent the owner or occupier of an adjoining tenement from building or placing on his own land anything which has the effect of illegally obstructing or obscuring the light of the dominant tenement (LORD MACNAGHTEN).

(5) A judge who exercises the functions of both judge & jury cannot be expected to view the premises himself, even if he considers himself an expert in such matters. But I have often wondered why the ct. does not more frequently avail itself of the power of calling in a competent adviser to report to the ct. upon the question. There are plenty of experienced surveyors accustomed to deal with large properties in London who might be trusted to make a perfectly fair & impartial report, fences in repair, but removed it, whereby pltf.'s horses strayed from the way upon deft.'s land. Rebutter, that the lease contained covenants allowing pltf. to enter on the land & view the state of repair, & that deft. would repair according to notice; that pltf. directed deft. to remove the fence along the east side of the way, & use the rails for other purposes, which deft. with the pltf.'s assistance, & as the act of pltf., accordingly did; & this is the removal referred to in the surrejoinder.—Held: the jury were justified in finding the rebutter proved by deft., whether it was a good answer in law to the surrejoinder not being a question for them.—WIXON v. PICKARD (1867), 25

PART VIII. SECT. 1.

828 i. No natural right to light—Over adjoining land.—The owner of a house, the light coming to which is obstructed by an erection made upon adjoining land by a person who quâd such adjoining land, is a trespasser, may possibly have an action against the person causing obstruction, even though he has not obtained by prescription an easement of light. But where the person causing such obstruction is the rightful owner of the adjoining land, or acting with the permission of the owner, no such action as aforesaid will lie against him unless pltf. has ac-

828 ii. ———.] — Where land fronting a street is leased for the erection of buildings, such buildings would ordinarily be lighted at front & back, & if the lessor happens to be the owner of land adjoining also fronting on the street, then in the absence of special circumstances there would be no implied grant by him of a right to light over such adjoining land, & a lessee putting up buildings with windows overlooking that land would do so at his own risk.—STEVENS v. NATIONAL MUTUAL LIFE ASSOC. OF AUSTRALIA, LTD. (1913), 32 N. Z. L. R. 1140.—N.Z.

subject, of course, to examination in ct. if required (LORD MACNAGHTEN).

(6) In some cases, of course, an injunction is necessary—if, for instance, the injury cannot be fairly compensated by money—if deft. has acted in a high-handed manner—if he has endeavoured to steal a march upon pltf. or to evade the jurisdiction of the ct. In all these cases an injunction is necessary, in order to do justice to pltf. & as a warning to others. But if there is really a question as to whether the obstruction is legal or not, & if deft. has acted fairly & not in an unneighbourly spirit, I am disposed to think that the ct. ought to incline to damages rather than to an injunction. It is quite true that a man ought not to be compelled to part with his property against his will, or to have the value of his property diminished, without an Act of Parliament. On the other hand, the ct. ought to be very careful not to allow an action for the protection of ancient lights to be used as a means of extorting money (LORD MACNAGHTEN).

(7) The common form of injunction which has been in use since the case of Yates v. Jack, No. 920, post, is not altogether free from objection. I think it would be better that the order, when expressed in general terms, should restrain deft. from erecting any building so as to cause a nuisance or illegal obstruction to pltf.'s ancient windows, as same existed previously to the taking down of the house which formerly stood on 'the site of defts.' new buildings. If the action is brought to a hearing before defts.' new buildings are completed, & there seems to be good grounds for pltf.'s apprehensions, an order, I think, might be conveniently made in that form with costs up to the hearing, & liberty to pltf. within a fixed time after completion to apply for further relief by way of mandatory injunction or damages, as he may be advised (LORD MACNAGHTEN).

(8) It is impossible to assert that any man has a right to a fixed amount of light ascertainable by metres & bounds (LORD DAVEY).

(9) There is no rule of law that if a person has 45 degrees of unobstructed light through a particular window left to him he cannot maintain an action for a nuisance caused by diminishing the light which formerly came through that window. Experience shows that it is, generally speaking, a fair working rule to consider that no substantial injury is done to him where an angle of 45 degrees is left to him, especially if there is good light from other directions as well (LORD LINDLEY).

(10) The general principle deducible appears to be that the right to light is in truth no more than a right to be protected against a particular form of nuisance, & that an action for the obstruction of light which has in fact been used & enjoyed for twenty years without interruption or written consent cannot be sustained unless the obstruction amounts to an actionable nuisance (LORD LINDLEY). —*COLLS v. 831. Analogous to servitude.—There are many cases in which the principle has been recognised, that one landowner cannot, by altering the condition of his land, deprive the owner of the adjoining land of the privilege of using his own as he might have done before. Thus, he cannot, by building a house near the margin of his land, prevent his neighbour from excavating his own land, although it may endanger the house; nor from building on his own land, although it may obstruct windows, unless, indeed, by lapse of time, the adjoining land has become subject to a right analogous to what in the Roman Law was called a servitude (CRESSWELL, J.). —*SMITH v. 832. Negative easement.—COLLS v. HOME & COLONIAL STORES, LTD., No. 830, ante.

833. — Over servient tenement as a whole.—Pltf. sought to recover damages for the alleged obstruction to his ancient light caused by the erection on part of defts'. servient tenement of a building having a tower 35 feet high & 10 feet square in the place of a portion of the previous building, which was only 12 feet 6 inches high, notwithstanding the fact that by the lowering of the remaining buildings on deft.'s servient tenement the total amount of light coming to the dominant tenement over the servient tenement was in no way diminished:—Held: (1) defts. were entitled to credit for the new or increased light coming over their lowered buildings & were not, in the circumstances, liable to pay any compensation, but that, having once taken credit for the new or increased light, they could not subsequently deprive the dominant tenement of it by restoring the lowered buildings to their former height; (2) the right to ancient light enjoyed by the dominant tenement was a negative easement over the servient tenement considered as a whole, & since the decision in Colls v. Home & Colonial Stores, No. 830, ante, pltf. had no property or right in or to any particular cones or pencils of rays of light coming in any particular direction over any particular portion of the servient tenement, & therefore, the variation in the heights of the buildings on the servient tenement, although altering the sky line over which the ancient light used to come, conferred no right of action on pltf., provided the interference thereby a subsequent temporary intermission of enjoyment, not amounting to abandonment; nor is it liable to be affected or prejudiced by any attempt to extend it beyond that which, having been enjoyed uninterruptedly during the required period, is declared by the statute to be not liable to be defeated; (2) The owner of a building does not exceed the limits of his right by opening new windows therein, overlooking his neighbour's land. The only remedy in the power of the adjoining owner is, to build on his own land, & so to shut out the offensive window. But, in doing this, he cannot lawfully obstruct ancient lights; (3) A. was possessed of premises which originally consisted of three storeys, with one ancient window in each storey. He altered the windows in the two lower storeys, but so as to make them both occupy a portion of the old apertures, retaining the window in the third storey unaltered. He also built two additional storeys in each of which he opened a new window. After these alterations were completed, B. who was erecting new premises upon the site of buildings which he had pulled down, built up a wall to such a height as to obscure the whole of the lights in A.'s building, it being impossible for B. to obstruct or block up A.'s upper windows, without also obstructing or blocking up the portion of the windows which occupied the position of the ancient windows, or to obstruct them in a manner more convenient (to B.) than by building up the wall as it was built. After B.'s wall was finished, A. caused the altered windows in his building to be restored to their original state, & the new windows in the two upper storeys to be blocked up, & then called upon B. to pull down his wall, & so to restore his (A.'s) premises to their former light & air; & upon his refusal to do so, brought an action for obstructing & continuing the obstruction of his ancient lights:—Held: the obstruction of A.'s ancient lights was unlawful. The opening of a new window being in itself an innocent act, cannot therefore destroy existing rights in one party, or give new, or revive old rights in another.

Some confusion seems to have arisen from speaking of the right of the neighbour in such a case as a right to obstruct the new lights. His right is, a right to use his own land by building on it as he thinks most to his interest; & if, by so doing he obstructs the access of light to the new windows, he is doing that which affords no ground of complaint. He has a right to build; & if he thereby obstructs the new lights, he is not committing a wrong (LORD CRANWORTH).—TAPLING v. JONES (1865), 20 C. B. N. S. 166; 11 H. L. 847. Whether extends to whole light enjoyed.—(1) The right acquired under Prescription Act, 1832 (c. 71), s. 3, is a right to the access & use of the whole or a substantial part of the particular cone of light which has passed for the statutory period over the servient to the dominant tenement (FRY, L.J.).

The word "access" in the sect. refers not to the access through the aperture of the dominant, but to the freedom of passage over the servient, tenement, although the aperture which admits the light into the dominant tenement defines the area which is to be kept free over the servient tenement. "The right thereto" means the right to the same access & use of light to & for any building.

(2) The Act does not require any identity, structural or otherwise, in the building which, after the twenty years, is to enjoy the right with the building which has acquired the right; but the right, although not in gross, but one which must be claimed in respect of a building, may be claimed in respect of any building which is enjoying the whole or a substantial part of the light which passed into the dominant tenement through the old aperture. Consequently, no alteration in the plane of the windows of the dominant tenement, either by advancing or setting back the building, will destroy the right so long as the owner of the dominant tenement can show that he is using through the new apertures in the wall of the new building the same, or a substantial part of the same, light which passed through the old apertures into the old buildings.

(3) But the right to relief may be lost, even where there is no substantial alteration, if the owner of the dominant tenement has by his alteration so confused the evidence that he cannot prove the identity of the light.

S., in 1872, pulled down a building in the east wall of which were ancient lights, & erected on the site a new building with larger & more numerous windows. No record was preserved of the positions or dimensions of the ancient lights, but it was found as a fact that substantial portions of six of the new windows corresponded with three of the ancient lights. The east wall had been advanced by distances varying from 2 feet 3 inches to 13 inches, the effect of which was slightly to alter the plane of the new windows:—Held: the alteration made by S. did not amount to an abandonment of his right, & pltf. was entitled to an injunction to restrain any obstruction of so much of the six new windows as corresponded with the three ancient lights.

(4) Since the statute, as before, the right remains a right to have an amount of access of light to & through apertures in a house or building which would be sufficient for the use & occupation of the building. It is not a right in gross, but a right to light in connection with a "dwelling-house, workshop, or building," the building, workshop, or dwelling-house being the means by which the light is enjoyed for a period of twenty years, & by which the right to enjoy it is acquired (BOWEN, L.J.).—*SCOTT v. (2) A right by way of easement to the uninterrupted access of air not coming by any definite channel but over the general unlimited surface of the alleged servient tenement cannot be acquired under Prescription Act, 1832 (c. 71), s. 2, by mere enjoyment for the statutory period, & the fact that the alleged dominant & servient tenements were both held under a common lessor, either of itself, or at any rate when coupled with the fact that the lease of the servient tenement was the earlier, negatived any claim to the easement as arising out of implied covenant.

Pltf.'s predecessor in title, a lessee, before 1843, erected on the demised land a permanent structure for the purpose of storing & seasoning timber & for exhibiting it to customers. The structure consisted of several floors or stages, & was substantially constructed with solid balks of upright timber or standards fixed in stone bases built on solid piers. The standards were tied together with longitudinal balks or cross-beams which supported floors or stages of solid planks, & were also connected by diagonal braces. The ends of the several floors were open & unglazed, & served for drying timber & admitting light. The light & air came over an open yard held by deft., under a lease originally granted by pltf.'s lessor. Deft. commenced building over this open yard. Pltf. brought an action to restrain him from building so as to interfere with pltf.'s right to light & air to his structure for storing timber over deft.'s yard:—Held: (3) in order to satisfy Prescription Act, 1832 (c. 71), s. 2, with regard to his right to light, it was not enough to show merely that at some time light came through a particular access, whilst at another time it did not, but that pltf. must show that the building had enjoyed the access of light by a definite access for the statutory period, & that, as pltf. had failed to show this, his claim could not succeed, & it was unnecessary to decide whether the structure was a building within the Act or not; (4) pltf. had also failed with regard to his right to air, as he had not shown an uninterrupted access of air to his structure through a definite channel for the statutory period.—HARRIS v. DE PINNA (1886), 33 Ch. D. 238; 56 L. J. Ch. 344; 54 L. T. 770; 50 J. P. 486; 2 T. L. R. 529, C. A.

There is, however, no rule that such special amount of light must have been used for the ordinary prescriptive length of time.

(2) A memorial chapel, unconsecrated, used for Church of England, & Presbyterian services & for confirmation & other classes, & decorated with stained windows & mural mosaics is a "building" within sect. 3 of the above Act, entitled to protection with regard to the light necessary not only for conducting the services & classes, but also for the designed illumination of the works of art.—*A.-G. v. 871. Alteration of user.—During period of acquisition.]—(1) The question whether the right to the access of light to a building which has been enjoyed through one window is preserved upon an alteration of the building depends on the identity of light, not on the identity of aperture.

(2) In cases where the light comes to any window over the roof of higher buildings, at an angle, & the building is altered by advancing the wall in which the window is, the right to access of light will be preserved if any window or aperture in the new wall intercepts & gives access to any substantial part of the light which passed through the old window. It makes no difference that the new window or aperture is at a much higher level than the old window.

(3) No alteration of a building, which would not involve the loss of a right to light when indefeasibly acquired, will, if made during the currency of the statutory period, prevent the acquisition of the right.—ANDREWS v. WAITE, [1907] 2 Ch. 500; 76 L. J. Ch. 676; 97 L. T. 428.

(a) In General.

878. Whether twenty years next before commencement of suit.]—Under Prescription Act, 1832 (c. 71), ss. 3 & 4, a party is prescriptively entitled to the access & use of light, if his enjoyment thereof commenced twenty years next before the bringing of an action in which the right is contested, provided such enjoyment has not at any time been interrupted, & the interruption acquiesced in for a whole year.

Accordingly, where A. had the free access of light & air through a window of his house for nineteen years & 330 days, & B. then raised a wall which obstructed the light, & the obstruction was submitted to only for 35 days, when A. brought an action to remove it:—Held: the right of action was complete; the twenty years' enjoyment was to be reckoned from the commencement of the enjoyment to the time of bringing the action, & an interruption of the enjoyment, in whatever period of the twenty years it might have happened could not be deemed an interruption within the meaning of the Act, unless it was acquiesced in for a whole year.—*FLIGHT v. To this plea plffs. replied that the access of light & air to the windows in question had been enjoyed as of right & without interruption by the respective occupiers of plffs.' messuage for & during the full period of twenty years before the obstruction, & for & during the full period of twenty years next before the commencement of a suit, or action, wherein plffs.' claim in this action, & to the access & use of light & air, was & is brought into question:—Held: (1) the twenty years' enjoyment of the access & use of light to a dwelling-house, etc., under Prescription Act, 1832 (c. 71), ss. 3 & 4, was to be taken to be the period next before some action or suit wherein the claim should have been brought in question, & consequently, the replication was good; (2) the custom to re-build to any height upon ancient foundations in the city of London was destroyed by sect. 3 of the above Act.—*COOPER v. Effect of.]—Plff. was the owner of an old wooden house erected on land adjoining a section which remained vacant until deft. erected a brick building upon it early in 1907. One of the rooms in the house, used as a bedroom, was lighted by a window on the south side. There had been an uninterrupted user of this light for upwards of twenty years prior to the coming into operation of the above Act which repeals sect. 3 of Prescription Act, 1832 (c. 71), but preserves rights then existing to user of light & air. The above Act, however, does not repeal sect. 4 of the Imperial Act, which provides that the period of twenty years' uninterrupted user necessary to constitute a prescriptive right shall be the period of twenty years next before action brought, & it was therefore urged on behalf of deft., whose building substantially reduced the light formerly enjoyed, that, as there had been a statutory interruption of the easement, i.e. from the time the above Act first came into operation to the time of action, plffs.' right was barred though not having been litigated within the twelve months prescribed by sect. 4 of the Imperial Act:—Held: the above Act preserved whatever rights plff. possessed at the time that Act came into operation, & stereotyped the position which then existed; & that she was therefore entitled to recover from deft. reasonable damages for the loss of light.—*WESTNEY v. through a window against which deft. had about fourteen months before action brought erected a permanent building which obstructed it, & pltf. had taken no active measures to cause the obstruction to be removed, but had several times, himself or by his tenant, complained of & protested against it:—Held: it was a question proper to be left to the jury whether or not there had been such a submission to or acquiescence in the interruption of the enjoyment as to deprive pltf. of the right to the light. Semble: the same sort of evidence of user or enjoyment need not be given in the case of a light as in the case of a claim of a right of way.—GLOVER v. COLEMAN (1874), L. R. 10 C. P. 108; 44 L. J. C. P. 66; 31 L. T. 684; 23 W. R. 103.

Interruption fluctuating & temporary—Onus of proof.—In an action for an injunction or damages for interference with the ancient lights of pltf.'s house by raising an old party wall fifteen feet above its original height, deft. pleaded that he had for several years been in the habit of piling up empty packing-cases against the wall to a height exceeding the new wall. The evidence was conflicting as to the minimum height of the pile of packing-cases, & as to the time they remained there, but it was proved that they were removed from time to time, some to be returned to the owners, & the rest to be broken up:—Held: there had been no interruption of pltf.'s enjoyment of light within Prescription Act, 1832 (c. 71), s. 4, & the pltf. were entitled to an inquiry as to damages. Semble: if, in an action for obstruction of light, it appears on pltf.'s evidence that there has been some interruption, which in its nature is permanent, the onus is on pltf. of proving that such interruption did not in fact continue with his acquiescence for a year; but if the interruption is in its nature fluctuating & temporary, the onus of proving that it in fact continued & was acquiesced in by pltf. for a year, lies on deft.—*PRESLAND v. What amounts to written agreement—Document signed by owner of dominant tenement.—K., the owner in fee of a freehold house, in 1814 put out four new windows, & signed & gave to S., the owner in fee of an adjacent freehold house overlooked by those windows, a document declaring that they were put out & remained upon the leave of S., & that he, K., would, on the request of S., or his heirs or assigns, at any time thereafter block up same, & in the meantime would pay S., his heirs & assigns, 6d. a year for the indulgence. This document was not signed by S. The rent was paid down to 1859. In 1877 S.'s successor in title called upon K.'s successor in title, who had bought the property in 1805 with notice of the document but had never paid any rent under it, to block up the four windows, & proceeded to obstruct the access of light to them. K.'s successor in title thereupon brought this action against him for an injunction, claiming to have acquired an indefeasible right to the access of light to the four windows by actual enjoyment for twenty years without intermission:—Held: (1) the enjoyment of light by K. & his successors had been by virtue of the document of 1814, & such document, although signed by K. only, was a consent or agreement expressly made or given for the purpose of such enjoyment within the meaning of Prescription Act, 1832 (c. 71), s. 3, so as to prevent K. & his successors from acquiring any right to the access & use of light under that sect.; (2) the agreement, having been acted upon by payment of rent thereunder to within twenty years from the commencement of the action, was enforceable in equity irrespective of the statute.

(3) It was proved that in 1859 the agent of the owner of S.'s tenement paid to him 6d., stating verbally that it was for the lights in G.'s house, the house which had belonged to K.:—Held: the agent being dead, this was evidence of payment of the rent by G. in 1859.—*BEWLEY v. The street was 31 feet wide. At the date of the leases there were on the north side of the street, opposite to pltf.'s houses, four old houses, also belonging to the Comrs., which were thirty & a half feet in height. Pltf.'s houses were nearly 44 feet in height. Each of pltf.'s leases contained a declaration that "notwithstanding anything herein contained, the lessors shall have power, without obtaining any consent from, or making any compensation to, the lessee, to deal as they may think fit with any of the premises adjoining or contiguous to the hereditaments hereby demised, & to erect, or suffer to be erected, on such adjoining or contiguous premises, any buildings whatsoever, whether such buildings shall or shall not affect or diminish the light or air which may now, or at any time during the term hereby granted, be enjoyed by the lessee, or the tenants or occupiers of the hereditaments hereby demised." The leases provided that "the word 'lessors' shall be taken to mean & include the Ecclesiastical Comrs., their successors & assigns, & other the reversioner or reversioners for

892 1. Adverse obstruction.—Deft. in 1855 or 1856 built a house on his lot adjoining pltf.'s, having three windows looking out on pltf.'s land. In 1864 deft. raised his house more than three feet,

& none of the windows being more than three feet high, the position of each of them was thus entirely changed:—Held: he had acquired no right under C. S. U. C., c. 88, s. 38, for that he had not enjoyed the access or use of the light at the same place for the statutory period.—HALL v. EVANS (1877), 42 U. C. R. 190.—CAN.

The time being of the premises, so far as same will admit, unless the context or nature of the case may require a different construction." From the late of the leases, until the building by deft., a period of more than twenty years, no alteration was made in the houses opposite pltf.'s houses. On July 19, 1892, an agreement was entered into between the Comrs. & deft., by which, in consideration of his pulling down & rebuilding the four old houses opposite to pltf.'s houses, in accordance with plans to be approved by the Comrs., they agreed to grant to deft. leases of the sites of the old houses & the buildings to be erected thereon. In pursuance of this agreement deft. pulled down the old houses, & was, with the approval of the Comrs., building new ones, which had already reached a height of 53½ feet, & were intended to be, when completed, about five or six feet higher. It was admitted that the new buildings would obstruct pltf.'s light:—Held: (1) the above clause in pltf.'s leases prevented them from acquiring a right to light under Prescription Act, 1832 (c. 71), s. 3; (2) pltf.'s leases & deft.'s agreement respectively passed by implication the subsoil of the street, usque ad medium filum viae, subject to the rights of the local authority in the surface of the street, & therefore, deft.'s premises were "adjoining or contiguous" to those of pltf.; (3) deft. was an "assign" of the benefit of the agreement between the Comrs. & pltf.; (4) deft. was entitled to build so as to obstruct pltf.'s lights.—HAYNES v. KING, [1893] 3 Ch. 439; 63 L. J. Ch. 21; 69 L. T. 855; 42 W. R. 56; 3 R. 715.

900. — Inscription on stone.—R., the owner in fee of a house & the adjoining land in 1816 conveyed the house in fee simple to J., the predecessor of pltf. At the same time a stone was built into the wall of the house, upon which was inscribed: "1816. This stone is placed by J. to perpetuate R.'s right to build within nine inches of this & any other building." The access of light to the windows of the house over the adjoining land was continuously enjoyed from 1816 to 1901 when deft. erected a building on the adjoining land which obstructed that access of light:—Held: the inscription could not be construed as consent or agreement "expressly made or given for the purpose" of the enjoyment of light within the meaning of Prescription Act, 1832 (c. 71), s. 3,

902. — Tenant in possession.—HYMAN v. VAN DEN BERGH, No. 465, ante.

903. Effect of agreement—Whether incumbrance created.—(1) A contract to sell buildings described by a plan which shows windows does not imply any warranty of a legal right to the access of light to those windows.

(2) The existence of an agreement which prevents the statutory period of prescription beginning to run does not create an incumbrance on the property, & the non-disclosure of such an agreement does not invalidate the contract. A clause in such an agreement that the owner of the buildings will block up the windows is an affirmative covenant only & cannot be enforced against subsequent purchasers.

(3) A further clause in such an agreement that the adjoining owner may enter & build up the windows in default of the owner of the buildings doing so is a mere revocable licence & does not give the adjoining owner any interest in the land, & if it did give such an interest, it would be void for perpetuity.

SECT. 4.—EXTENT OF EASEMENT.

SUB-SECT. 1.—PROTECTION FROM INTERFERENCE AMOUNTING TO NUISANCE.

A. In General.

904. Interference must amount to nuisance.—

(1) An action on the case lies for erecting a hogstye so near the house of pltf. that the air thereof was corrupted; so of a lime-kiln, if the smoke enters pltf.'s house so that he cannot dwell there: so of a dye-house, etc., if the filth runs into his fish pond, etc.

(2) Where an easement or profit by prescription is pleaded, another prescription cannot be pleaded in destruction of such easement or profit.

PART VIII. SECT. 4, SUB-SECT. 1.—A.

904 i. Interference must amount to nuisance.—Deft., being the owner of certain land, on the east end of which was a house lighted by windows on the west side, sold & conveyed part of the land, including that part upon which he house was built, to pltf. Deft. subsequently built a high fence very close to the house, entirely on his own land, but up to the boundary line. The fence cut off the light, & by excluding the air impaired the ventilation, & the snow & ice collected in the narrow space between the fence & the house, from which it could not be removed, & when melting in the spring he water could not run away, but oaked through the walls of the house:—Held: deft. could not derogate from his own grant, & as pltf. was thus deprived of that comfortable & reasonable enjoyment of the house which he had a right to expect, an injunction was granted restraining deft. from continuing the fence in such way as to interfere with that enjoyment.—UTTSCH v. SPRY (1907), 9 O. W. R. 96; 14 O. L. R. 233.—CAN.

904 ii.—Deft.'s house originally was a little higher than pltf.'s house. Deft. pulled down this house, & on the site began to build a new house. Pltf. sued for an injunction, alleging that this house, which would be of much greater height than the old one, would completely block up his ancient windows & cause him material damage:—Held: although pltf.'s light had been sensibly diminished by deft.'s new building, there had not been such large, material, & substantial damage as to require interference by injunction, nor had pltf.'s room been rendered unfit for the purpose for which it might reasonably be expected to be used, but pltf. was entitled to damages.—GHANASHAM NILKANT NADKARNI v. MORORA RAMCHANDRA PAI (1891), 1 L. R. 18 Bom. 474.—IND.

904 iv.—Deft.'s windows of the back return of M.'s house looked into a passage or yard nine feet wide. The opposite wall of G.'s house was thirty feet high. G. proposed to take down the existing wall of his house, & rebuild it at a height of sixty feet. The ct., being of opinion that the windows would be deprived of a considerable amount of sky area, granted a prohibitory injunction.—MAGUIRE v. CHATTAN (1868), 1 R. 2 Eq. 246.—IR.

904 v.—Deft. Though there be an undoubted obstruction of light, yet, where such obstruction is trivial the ct. will not grant a mandatory injunction.—SANKEY v. GUNN (1894), 28 L. T. 128.—IR.

904 vi.—Deft. In an action for the obstruction of ancient light in pltf.'s building:—Held: an obstruction, amounting to an actionable nuisance, had been caused by the new building, & an injunction should be granted.—BLACK v. SCOTTISH TEMPERANCE LIFE ASSURANCE CO., [1908] 1 L. R. 541; 42 L. T. 191.—IR.

905. —]—Where an application was made for an injunction to restrain building, so as to stop up lights, not being ancient lights:—Held: it would be refused.

If the house were built on the old foundation, it would entitle plffs. to their lights as an ancient messuage; but if on the new foundation, then the party must show a new agreement, or something to import one. . . . I am of opinion it is not a nuisance contrary to law; for it is not sufficient to say it will alter plff.'s lights, for then no vacant piece of ground could be built on in the city. It is true the value of plff.'s house may be reduced by rendering the prospect less pleasant, but that is no reason to hinder a man from building on his own ground (LORD HARDWICKE, C.).—FISHMONGERS' Co. v. It also alleged, that in the framework of the erection it was intended to introduce slanting panes of glass, called "*louvre*s," the effect of which would be to cause currents of air & an accumulation of soot to the great annoyance of plff., & that unless the glass screenwork was kept clean & free from dust & dirt, it would become offensive, & cause a greater obstruction to the light & air of plff.'s house:—Held: motion for an injunction would be refused, on the ground that there was no evidence of any actual obstruction to the light & air by the screen & the evidence only amounted to opinion, that the effect of the erection would be to occasion a material obstruction of light & air, & there might have been evidence of what actually had happened.—RADCLIFFE v. B. What Interference amounts to Nuisance.

911. Whether owner entitled to whole light or only sufficient quantity for ordinary purposes.—To constitute an illegal obstruction, by building, of plff.'s ancient lights, it is not sufficient, that plff. has less light than he had before, but there diminution of light must be sensible: but plff. is entitled substantially to all the light which he enjoyed before the obstruction, & evidence that enough of light remains to enable plff. to carry on his business is not sufficient to give defts. a verdict.—MANNING v. GRESHAM HOTEL Co. (1867), L. R. 1 C. L. 115.—IR.

911 ii. —]—Where premises are already so badly lighted that the smallest deprivation of light would substantially inconvenience the occupiers in their business they are entitled to relief on such deprivation.—

A. made no objection, being, as he alleged, under the impression that the new buildings were to be in a different situation, but never made further inquiries, nor asked to see the plan. C. commenced his preparations eleven days afterwards, & about a week later commenced the actual building. About a week after this A. discovered his mistake as to the position of the new buildings, & four days later wrote to C. to desist, & threatened proceedings in the Ct. of Ch. if compliance were refused. Eight days afterwards, & when the buildings were nearly complete, A. filed a bill against C.:—Held: there was no such acquiescence as would deprive A. of his right to relief.

Seemle: (2) a stronger case of acquiescence is requisite to debar a pltf. from relief at the hearing of a cause than to disentitle him to an interlocutory injunction.

(3) A pltf. coming to the ct. for an injunction to restrain the erection of new buildings by his neighbour, on the ground of interference with his light & air, must show that his own residence will be rendered substantially less comfortable for purposes of occupation. Though an injunction be refused in such a case, the ct. if it appear that damages have been sustained may, if it think fit, exercise the jurisdiction conferred by Chancery Amendment Act, 1858 (c. 27), & direct an inquiry as to damages.

(4) Qu.: whether the ct., in a case of nuisance where pltf. would probably recover damages at law, will grant an injunction if the damages would

905. —[—] Where an application was made for an injunction to restrain building, so as to stop up lights, not being ancient lights:—Held: it would be refused.

If the house were built on the old foundation, it would entitle ptffs. to their lights as an ancient messuage; but if on the new foundation, then the party must show a new agreement, or something to import one. . . . I am of opinion it is not a nuisance contrary to law; for it is not sufficient to say it will alter ptff.'s lights, for then no vacant piece of ground could be built on in the city. It is true the value of ptff.'s house may be reduced by rendering the prospect less pleasant, but that is no reason to hinder a man from building on his own ground. LORD HARDWICKE, C.—FISHMONGERS' CO. v. It also alleged, that in the framework of the erection it was intended to introduce slanting panes of glass, called "louvre," the effect of which would be to cause currents air & an accumulation of soot to the great annoyance of ptff., & that unless the glass screenwork was kept clean & free from dust & dirt, it would become offensive, & cause a greater obstruction of the light & air of ptff.'s house:—Held: motion for an injunction would be refused, on the ground that there was no evidence of any actual obstruction to the light & air by the screen & the evidence only amounted to opinion, that the effect of the erection would be to occasion a material obstruction of light & air, & there might have been evidence of what actually had happened.—AD-CLIFFE v. B. What Interference amounts to Nuisance.

911. Whether owner entitled to whole light or only sufficient quantity for ordinary purposes.—To constitute an illegal obstruction, by building, of ptff.'s ancient lights, it is not sufficient, that ptff. has less light than he had before, but there diminution of light must be sensibly felt; but ptff. is entitled substantially to all the light which he enjoyed before the obstruction, & evidence that enough of light remains to enable ptff. to carry on his business is not sufficient to give defts. a verdict.—MANNING v. 917. ——(1) It is not in every case in which an action can be maintained for the obstruction of ancient lights, that an injunction will be granted; something more is required than that amount of injury for which damages may be recovered at law.

(2) The foundation of the jurisdiction in equity to interfere by injunction is the existence of an injury to property of such a nature as to render the property in a material degree unsuitable for the purposes to which it is now applied or to lessen considerably the enjoyment of it. Such an injury is considered by the ct. to be incapable of compensation in damages.

(3) Semble: in a case where the abridgement of light complained of does not materially interfere with the comfort of the persons complaining, & does not materially diminish the suitability of the premises for the present purpose to which they are applied, the ct. has no jurisdiction to interfere by injunction on the ground of a diminution of light which, having regard to a future possible destination of the property, may materially diminish its value.

(4) A judge sitting in equity is bound to pronounce his judgment according to the evidence; hence to decide a case upon conclusions of fact derived from ocular inspection is a course which a judge in equity cannot, in ordinary cases be recommended to adopt.—JACKSON v. 919. ——]—The ct. will not grant an injunction to restrain the erection of a building on account of its obstructing pltf.'s light, unless pltf. can show that he will sustain substantial damage. If he cannot do this, his ground of application to the ct. fails, & no inquiry will be granted as to damages, & the bill will be altogether dismissed, but without prejudice to an action at law.—ROBSON v. 920. ——(1) The owner of ancient lights is entitled not only to sufficient light for the purpose of his then business, but to all the light which he had enjoyed previously to the interruption sought to be restrained.

(2) Where an injunction was granted to restrain the interruption of an ancient light, the ct. gave deft. leave to apply in order to ascertain whether any building which he might propose to erect would cause such an interruption.

Pltfs. are entitled to an injunction restraining deft. from erecting any building so as to darken, injure, or obstruct any of the ancient lights of pltf. as same were enjoyed previously to the taking down by deft. of his buildings on the opposite side of the street, & also from permitting to remain any buildings already erected, which will cause any such obstruction. Whether the buildings already erected not exactly opposite to pltfs.' messuage will have that effect when the whole of deft.'s buildings are finished, is a matter on which the evidence does not enable me to come to any satisfactory conclusion, & I am therefore obliged to frame the decree in this general form, leaving it to pltfs. to apply by notice in case the terms of the injunction are violated. I shall, however, be willing to introduce a proviso into the order similar to that adopted in Stoke v. City Offices Company, No. 1473, post, enabling the parties to come before the chief clerk in order to have it ascertained whether any proposed addition to the building will or will not be a violation of the injunction; & it must also in like manner be left open to pltfs. to show, if they can, that the buildings already erected materially interfere with the light heretofore enjoyed by them (LORD CRANWORTH, C.).—YATES v. On a written notice from W. they desisted, but seven months after, when the cts. were not sitting, suddenly recommenced, & carried up the wall to a great height before a bill could be filed or an interim order for an injunction obtained, which was done as soon as possible, to restrain raising any buildings so as to obstruct pltf.'s light & air, & the enjoyment of his ancient lights, & for damages. KRUSZINSKI* (1887), 3 T. L. R. 290.

929. —.—.]—In considering the question of the right to relief for interference with ancient lights, there is no rule of law that the owner or tenant of the house is entitled only to so much light as may come up to some imaginary standard or measure as to what the house may ordinarily require for purposes of habitation or business. The question is essentially one of comparison—whether by reason of the deprivation of light the house is substantially less comfortable than it was before, having regard to the ordinary uses by way of habitation or business to which the house has been put or may reasonably be supposed to be capable of being put.

Certain trade premises contained ancient lights to which the flow of light was full & uninterrupted. During the latter part only of the statutory period of twenty years before action, & at the time the action was brought, the premises were used by pltf. for a trade requiring an exceptional quantity & quality of light. Deft. erected a building which substantially interfered with the light coming to pltf.'s windows, & so darkened the premises as to leave an amount of light sufficient only for purposes of ordinary habitation or business, & materially insufficient for the special requirements of pltf.'s present trade:—Held: as pltf.'s ancient lights had been substantially interfered with by defts.' building, & the user of pltf.'s premises for the purpose of a special business requiring much light was not unreasonable, pltf. were entitled to damages for the interference.—*WARREN v. Defts. proposed to erect a new building 73 feet high & separated from pltfs.' warehouse on the south by B. street, 45 feet wide. On this frontage of pltfs.' warehouse there were 36 windows, six on the ground floor & on each of the five floors above it. The expert evidence was that, although the direct light to four of the windows on the ground floor & first floor directly opposite to the proposed new building would be intercepted to a very large extent, these rooms would still be well lighted, & no case was made out in respect of the other fourteen windows in B. street alleged to be seriously affected. In a quia timet action by pltfs. to restrain the erection of the proposed building:—Held: inasmuch as the four rooms specially affected would still remain well lighted rooms, the warehouse would possess, on the evidence, an unusually large amount of light for the carrying on of the business having regard to its locality. Pltfs., therefore, had not established an actionable nuisance or the insufficiency of the light which remained, & no injunction would be granted.—*SEMON (CHARLES) & CO. v. 936. Application of rule.—(1) The ct. will not in an ordinary case restrain the erection of a building the light of which above an ancient light is not greater than the distance from the light.

of the ancient lights of pltf.'s houses on the opposite side of the street:—Held: pltf. was entitled to an injunction restraining the raising the new building to a greater height.—*HACKETT v. 938. —.—.]—Metropolis Management Amendment Act, 1862 (c. 102).—An ancient light of pltf., a sculptor, had a north aspect, in a street 31 feet wide. Defts.' buildings on the opposite side of the street were, as to part, exactly 31 feet high, & as to the other part, a little less than that height. They claimed to have a statutory right to raise their buildings to a height which would subtend an angle of 45 degrees measured from a base line level with the centre of pltf.'s light:—Held: the statutory regulation according to the above Act as to the height of buildings in streets was not to be taken as limiting the right by prescription to ancient lights, but such right depended upon the degree & amount of obscurity in each particular case.—THEOD. v. DOBENHAM (1876), 2 Ch. D. 165; 24 W. R. 775.

Annotation:—Apprvd. Colls v. Home & Colonial Stores, [1904] A. C. 179.

939. Rule not conclusive—Prima facie evidence against interference.—CITY OF LONDON BREWERY CO. v. TENNANT, No. 475, ante.

940. Not rule or presumption of law—Test to guide court.—An ancient church in the City of London was vested in the Ecclesiastical Comrs., upon trust to pull down the building, dispose of the materials, & sell the site. They pulled down the church, & the site was still vacant. Deft., who had become the owner of land formerly part of the glebe of the church, on which some low buildings had stood, commenced the erection of buildings which, if completed, would have materially obstructed the access of light to windows occupying same position as those of the late church. The Ecclesiastical Comrs. commenced an action to restrain the erection of the proposed buildings:—Held: (1) the fact of there being no existing windows the access of light to which would be interfered with, was no objection to the granting an injunction if the right to access of light had not been abandoned; (2) the Ecclesiastical Comrs. had power to sell the site, with all the easements which had been enjoyed by the church, so that if the church had ancient lights the purchaser would have the benefit of them; (3) although the freehold of both the church & the glebe had throughout been vested in the rector there was no such manifest impossibility for the church to have a title by prescription or grant to access of light over the glebe as to induce the ct. to refuse an interim injunction till the trial. Semble: such an easement might be effectually created.

(4) The angle of 45 degrees is not taken from the windows, but from the top of one house to the level of the street on the other side.

(5) We must consider whether there is a substantial interference with the light, having regard to the use to which the building in this place will be put (COTTON, L.J.).

PART VIII. SECT. 4, SUB-SECT. 2.

939 i. Rule not conclusive—Prima facie evidence against interference.—The 45 degrees rule is not a positive rule of law, but is a circumstance which the ct. may take into consideration, & is especially valuable when the proof of the obscurity is not definite or satisfactory.—DRLH & LONDON BANK

939 ii. —.—.]—In a suit for an injunction to restrain deft. from obstructing the access of light & air to pltf.'s windows the lower ct. granted an injunction solely on the ground that deft.'s new building left pltf. with less than 45 degrees of light, & dispensed with any further evidence:—Held: the ct. was in error.—CHOTALAL MOHANLAL P. LALLUBHAI SUBCHAND (1905), 1 L. R. 29 Bom. 157.—IND.

940 i. Not rule or presumption of law—Test to guide court.—There is no greater liberty of obstructing ancient lights in large & populous cities than in the open country; nor is the right

(6) There is no rule of law, no rule of evidence, & no presumption, except of the very slightest kind, that, where the angular height of an erection is less than 45 degrees, the access of light is not substantially interfered with (JAMES, L.J.).—ECCLESIASTICAL COMRS. 941. ———. J. COLLIS v. HOME & COLONIAL STORES, LTD., No. 830, ante.

942. ———. Question of fact.—(1) There is no conclusion of law that a building will not obstruct the light coming to a window if it permits the light to fall on the window at an angle of not less than 45 degrees from the vertical. (2) the question of the amount of obstruction is always a question of fact which depends on the evidence in each case. Therefore, a pltf. whose ancient light is obstructed is entitled to a judgment in general terms, without referring to the angle of incidence of the light, unless there is some special evidence justifying the insertion of such a clause.—PARKER v. FIRST AVENUE HOTEL CO. (1883), 24 Ch. D. 282; 49 L. T. 318; 32 W. R. 105, C. A.

SUB-SECT. 3.—EXTRAORDINARY USER—USER FOR SPECIAL PURPOSE.

943. Easement acquired by express grant—Special purpose known to grantor.—The right to an ancient light depends upon an implied contract; but there may be a right to a light depending upon an express contract; & therefore, defts., who had become the reversioners of the premises, & who were about to diminish their lessee's ancient light, were, upon the principle of ancient light & implied contract, & also express contract, as existing between landlord & tenant, restrained by injunction from obscuring the ancient light.—HEIZ v. UNION BANK OF LONDON (1854), 2 Giff. 686; 21 L. T. O. S. 137; 1 Jur. N. S. 127; 3 W. R. 49; 66 E. R. 287; subsequent proceedings, 24 L. T. O. S. 186, L. J.

944. Easement acquired by implied grant—What grant implied.—On a grant of land with buildings upon it there will only be implied a right to access of light for ordinary purposes which might reasonably be in the contemplation of the parties at the time of the grant, & not to access of light for any special purposes requiring an unusual amount of light.

A lease for eighty years was granted to pltf.'s predecessors in title, who were architects, of certain buildings in the city of London, erected by them in pursuance of a building agreement.

to protection limited by any positive rule of law, as by the circumstance that 45 degrees of elevation are left unobstructed.—MACKAY v. SCOTTISH WIDOWS' FUND ASSURANCE SOCIETY (1877), 1 R. 11 Eq. 541.—IR.

PART VIII. SECT. 4, SUB-SECT. 3.

m. Prescriptive period not completed—Relief granted.—A bill was filed by a seed merchant to restrain defts., who occupied adjacent offices, from erecting a new building then in progress, which he alleged would obstruct the access of light to an ancient window of the room in which he had sifted his seeds for the previous seventeen years.—Held: defts. having caused such diminution of light, & notwithstanding certain illumination afforded by them, prevented pltf. from carrying on the delicate operation of sifting seeds in the room, he was Pltf. brought an action to restrain deft., who was a subsequent lessee of an adjoining building from the same lessors, from obstructing the access of light to pltf.'s building. The obstruction was not sufficient to injuriously affect the light enjoyed by pltf. for ordinary business purposes, but prevented their user of the building for the business of wool-sampling which required a special amount of light.—Held: pltf. had no right to an amount of light sufficient for wool-sampling, which was a special purpose not in contemplation at the date of the original agreement.—CORRETT v. JONAS, [1892] 3 Ch. 137; 62 L. J. Ch. 43; 67 L. T. 191; 3 R. 25.

945. Easement acquired by prescription—Whether special user for twenty years necessary.—Pltf. had been lessee of a dwelling-house in which he had, for nearly eight years, carried on business as a repairer of jewellery & watches.—Held: he was entitled to damages against the owner of adjacent premises who was in the process of constructing a building which would occasion such an obstruction of pltf.'s light as to injure him in his business.

Pltf. has been in possession of his house for about seven years, & it is said that, because he has not been in enjoyment of the light for twenty years, he can claim no protection from an injury that may accrue to any specialty in his trade by its diminution. . . . Pltf. has a right to the est.'s protection (STUART, V.C.).—LYON v. DILLMORE (1866), 14 L. T. 183; 14 W. R. 511.

946. ———. J.—In order to establish the right to the access of an extraordinary amount of light necessary for a particular purpose or business to an ancient window; open, uninterrupted, & known enjoyment of such light in the manner in which it is at present enjoyed & claimed must be shown for a period of twenty years.—LANFRANCHI v. STANLEY (W. F.) & Co.*, 17 D. (1902), 50 W. R. 282.

952. ————]—(1) A right to a special amount of light necessary for a particular business cannot be acquired by twenty years' enjoyment to the knowledge of the owner of the servient tenement.

(2) In considering the question of the right to relief for interference with ancient lights, it is a question of fact whether the user of the premises is one which requires an ordinary or a special amount of light. It cannot be predicated as a matter of law whether any particular business, e.g., an architect's, is an ordinary business in the sense that it only requires an ordinary amount of light.—AMBLER v. GORDON, [1905] 1 K. B. 417; 74 L. J. K. B. 185; 92 L. T. 96; 21 T. L. R. 205. Annotation: Refd. Higgins v. Betts, [1905] 2 Ch. 210.

(2) Nor if a person complaining of interference with his light has offered to withdraw his opposition for a fixed sum, will the ct. gather from that fact alone that the damage is not irreparable, & send the case to a jury to access the exact damage done. Were the ct. to do so, it would be conceding to persons desirous of erecting buildings the existence of an unknown Act of Parliament, & enabling them to force the sale of pltf.'s right, not at his own valuation, but at the estimate of a jury.

(3) It is clear that the right of a person living in a town to protection from interference with his cave-stone, obstructed an ancient light in an opposite house. That obstruction prevented the owner of this last-named house from using his ancient light in examining colours, etc., for which purpose that light was essential. BHAGUBHAI PRANVALABHAI* (1884), 1 L. R. 8 Bom. 95.—IND.

p. ————]—Parol agreement.—In an light is not different from the right of a person living in the country.

(4) The following defences are useless: That pltf's. will still have as much light as many other persons; that they might have made their windows larger; that they had sometimes used Venetian blinds; that a room said to be used for a certain purpose was not a good one for that purpose, & that it had been used for that purpose, clam; & that def'ts. would face their buildings with glazed tiles.

(5) The doctrine of the ct. as to interference with air rests on nuisance.

(6) The benefit of sending a case of this kind to a jury is doubtful. The jury can contribute nothing but the view; & their view is likely to be prejudiced, since they see only the existing state of the light, which may be equal to the ordinary state of the light in the neighbourhood.

(7) Interference with lateral light should be restrained; for if it were not, all the neighbours round might obstruct the light, & so in many places almost total darkness might be caused.

SECT. 5.—EXTINGUISHMENT.

Sec, generally, Part VI., ante.

956. In alteration of one servient tenement—Effect on burden on neighbouring servient tenement.—An abstraction of light coming over adjoining property, acquiesced in or consented to by the owner of the dominant tenement, does not entirely negative his right to an easement of light over other adjoining property, though it does not give him any further right over that second adjoining property so as to prevent the erection of a building which he could not have prevented had he not consented to the prior abstraction of light action for obstructing light & air by the erection of a wall upon def't's premises, contiguous to & against pltf.'s premises, def't. relied upon an agreement entered into by former owners of the respective premises, reserving liberty to the then owner of def't's premises to build a wall which would or might obstruct light & air from pltf.'s premises:—Held: the agreement, not being in writing, was ineffectual to prevent the easement becoming indefeasible after twenty years' user.—

960 1. Substantial identity of new & old windows—(General rule.)—The title to light acquired under Prescription Act, 1832 (c. 71), by a twenty years' enjoyment is a right to a certain amount of light only, & does not prevent the owner of one of the adjacent tenements from altering the aperture through which that amount of light approaches. —*MAQUIRE v. A few of the windows in the new house included the space occupied by ancient windows, but were of larger dimensions; several others included some portion of the space occupied by ancient windows; & in some cases, the spaces occupied by ancient windows were entirely built up in the new house. Defts. commenced to build a house on the opposite side of the street, which if completed according to the plans would materially interfere with the light coming to pltfs' windows. On a motion for an interim injunction:—Held: pltfs. had shown an intention to preserve, & not to abandon, their ancient lights, & there was a fair question of right to be tried at the hearing, & considering that the balance of convenience was in favour of granting an injunction rather than of allowing defts. to complete their building with an undertaking to pull it down if required to do so, an injunction would be granted till the hearing.—*NEWSON v. The right remains where any portion of the light which would have passed over the servient tenement through the old windows passes also through the new windows (Fry, J.).

(2) There being a right to the access of light to windows in the walls of certain cottages, the walls of some of the cottages were set back & windows made in the new wall of the same size, & in the same relative positions as the former windows in the former walls:—Held: the easement of light was not thereby destroyed.

(3) In the case of another of the cottages the occupier made an addition thereto, & for the purpose of so doing built a new wall with a window in it outside the old wall & window at a different angle, but the old window remained inside the new one, & still continued to receive the light:—Held: the right to the access of light to the old window was not destroyed.—*BARNES v. Effect of increase of light—Obstructing new window involving obstructing old.—Pltf., being reversioner of a house which adjoined premises in the occupation of deft. & had ancient windows, rebuilt the house, added an upper story, opened windows in that story, & enlarged the ancient windows & otherwise altered their position, such rebuilding & alterations being within twenty years of the commencement of the action. Deft. subsequently rebuilt his premises, & thereby darkened the windows in both the upper & the lower stories of pltf.'s house. In an action by pltf., as reversioner, for this obstruction:—Held: (1) pltf. having, by his alterations, exceeded the limits of his right, & it being, through the nature of such alterations, impossible for deft., in the lawful exercise of his own rights, to obstruct such excess without at the same time obstructing pltf.'s former right, pltf. must be considered as losing his former right, at all events until he restored his house to its original condition; (2) a defence founded upon the fact of such alteration by pltf., & the impossibility of a partial obstruction, was he rebuilt his house, & opened new windows, which were of nearly the same size, but were a little higher than the old ones. In 1899 deft. built his house & blocked up these two new windows. 975. ———.—]—Pltf. was owner of a building two stories high, with a range of windows in each story. Those on the ground floor were ancient unaltered windows, those on the second floor had, within twenty years, been altered, not in number, but in size, by additions on one side & the top of each window. Pltf.'s building was at a distance of ten feet from the edge of his land. After the alteration in pltf.'s windows deft. built a shop close to the edge of his own land, but without any intention of obstructing any of pltf.'s windows. The jury found that the effect of deft.'s building was to obstruct the lower windows, but the question as to the right of pltf. to complain of the obstruction was reserved to the ct. on the above facts & a model of the premises, which was found to be correct:—Held: (1) (ERLE, C.J., & WILLIAMS, J.) pltf.'s right to the light of the lower windows was not lost by reason of the opening of the upper windows, & if deft. intended to justify his obstruction of the lower windows, on the ground that he had built with the intention of obstructing the upper windows, & could not obstruct the upper without also obstructing the lower, it was necessary for him to have raised that defence & proved it at the trial, & he could not rely on the mere fact that the result of his obstruction was to do that which, if he had so intended it, might have been lawfully done by him; (2) (BYLES, J.) the right of the servient owner to block up ancient lights, when new ones are opened, is not absolute, but conditional on the existence of an inability to block up the new without blocking up the old, & as the servient owner in this case had not yet exercised his right of blocking up the new windows, he was liable to the owner of the dominant tenement for blocking up the old; (3) (KEATING, J.) the question turned upon whether or not the alteration of the upper windows by the dominant owner was so material as that the right to the easement, as it formerly existed, was thereby gone, & if that were so, & the jury had found that the unprivileged light could not be obstructed, without also obstructing the privileged light, deft. would not be liable for the latter obstruction; but in this case this defence was not established.—BINCKES v. could not possibly obstruct the new windows without at the same time obstructing the ancient lights, pltf. was not entitled to an injunction as prayed; (2) pltf., on undertaking to close up the new windows & to restore the ancient lights to their original position, would be entitled to an injunction; but as this was new relief, he would be obliged to pay the costs of the suit.—WEATHERLEY v. Pltf. was also about to alter the part of the building which contained the ancient windows in question, but he intended to retain or to restore the ancient windows:—Held: the obstruction caused by pltf.'s own new buildings on the south was no reason why an injunction should not be granted to restrain the building by deft. of the wall on the north; (3) an injunction would be accordingly granted on interlocutory motion to restrain till the hearing the further building of deft.'s wall, the order being prefaced with a statement that he intended to retain or to restore the ancient windows in question; (4) the injunction would have been a mandatory one, so as to compel deft. to pull down the part of his wall already built, but for the circumstance that pltf. was not then using the ancient windows in question, & would be able to bring his cause to a hearing before his intended alterations could be completed.—STRAIGHT

(3) No man shall be allowed to derogate from his own grant. Where a party granted land to C. who built a house, & the grantor subsequently granted a lease to the tenant of that house, of a portion of land adjoining the house, for the purpose of erecting a chaise-house & stables, which land was described as bounded on the north by the premises in question:—Held: in considering the question, no weight was to be attached to the fact, that the original conveyance & the lease proceeded from the same grantor, the lease must be taken to be the only grant; & it would be extending the principle too far, to consider the making of erections by the grantor, or those claiming under him, on the south side of that dwelling-house, as derogating from that grant.—*BLANCHARD v. 998. Rights of riparian owners ex jure naturæ—Distinguished.—When a riparian owner sells part of his estate, including land on the banks of a natural stream, it is not necessary to make any express provision as to the grant or reservation of the ordinary rights of a riparian proprietor. These rights are not easements to be granted or reserved as appurtenant to what is respectively sold or retained, but are parts of the fee simple & inheritance of the land sold or retained. If it be desired to alter or modify these rights, it can only be done by the grant or reservation of rights in the nature of easements as the case may require. If no such rights are granted or reserved the vendor remains, & the purchaser becomes a riparian owner, & retains or acquires all the ordinary rights of a riparian owner (PARKER, J.).—PORTSMOUTH BOROUGH WATERWORKS CO. v. (2) Where, through an artificial channel, made for the purpose of draining mines, the drainage water has flowed for twenty years in a pure state, in consequence of the working of the mines having been discontinued, over premises of a person who has used it for that period, the working of the mines cannot be resumed, unless there is a custom to warrant it, so as to foul the water & disturb his enjoyment. Qu.: whether in the absence of custom, the practice of all mineral districts is material to show that the enjoyment of such water was not of right, as it must have been known that the mine-owner had made the watercourse for his own convenience, & had ceased to work it with the intention of resuming whenever it suited his interest.—*MAGOR v. A. In General.

1000. Subterranean water.—The owner of land through which water flows in a subterranean course has no right or interest in it which will enable him to maintain an action against a landowner, who, in carrying on mining operations in his own land in the usual manner, drains away the water from the land of the first mentioned owner, & lays his well dry.

Qu.: if the well had been ancient, whether there would have been any difference.—ACTON v. BRUNDELL (1843), 12 M. & W. 324; 13 L. J. Ex. 289; 1 L. T. O. S. 207; 152 E. R. 1223, Ex. Ch.

1001. Stream—Distinguished from percolating water.—Water percolating discontinuously through or along strata cannot be described as a stream.

A lessor demised by lease a distillery, cottages, thirteen & a half acres of land, with two ponds, "together with right to the water in the said ponds & in the streams leading thereto." The lease also contained the usual warrantance clause. The lessor sunk a tank on ground outside but adjoining the demised subjects, & drew off from marshy ground percolating water which would have found its way eventually into one of the ponds.—Held: water percolating through the ground towards the pond was not water in any stream leading to the pond.—M'NAB v. ROBERTSON, [1897] A. C. 129; 66 L. J. P. C. 27; 75 L. T. 666; 61 J. P. 468, 11 L.

(2) The grant of a right of "passage & running water" through a drain or watercourse does not entitle the grantee to discharge sewage effluent into such drain or watercourse.—PHILLIMORE v. WATFORD RURAL COUNCIL, [1913] 2 Ch. 434; 82 L. J. Ch. 514; 109 L. T. 616; 77 J. P. 453; 57 Sol. Jo. 741; 11 L. G. R. 980.

B. Acquisition of Easement.

1003. By grant.—Every owner of land on the banks of a river has prima facie an equal right to use the water & cannot acquire a right to throw the water back on the proprietor above or to divert it from the proprietor below without a grant or 20 years' enjoyment which is evidence of a grant.—*WRIGHT v. 1004. ———.]—The privilege of washing away sand, stone & rubble, dislodged in the necessary working a tin mine, & of having the same sent down a natural stream running through pltf.'s land, may be the subject of a grant, & be pleaded as a prescriptive right, under Prescription Act, 1832 (c. 71), to a declaration charging defts. with throwing such stone, sand & rubble into the stream, & thereby filling up its bed within pltf.'s land, & causing the water to flow over it. Such privilege may also be well pleaded as a local custom.—CARLYON v. LOVERING (1857), 1 H. & N. 784; 26 L. J. Ex. 251; 28 L. T. O. S. 356; 5 W. R. 347; 156 E. R. 1417.

course, in which rights may be acquired by user, the flow of water must possess that unity of character by which the flow on one person's land can be identified with that on his neighbour's land. A grant of such water right need not be in writing.—JENNY LIND CO. v. BRADLEY-NICHOLSON CO. (1883), 1 B. C. L. pt. 11, 185; 1 M. M. Cas. 9.—CAN.

1003 iii. ———.]—The law of Guernsey does not allow of the constitution of a servitude or easement except by express grant; but this rule does not apply to the natural right of the proprietor of higher land to have the water which naturally falls on his land discharged to the contiguous lower land of another proprietor.—GIBBONS v. LKNRESEY (1915), 84 L. J. P. C. 158.—CHANNEL ISLANDS.

1007 i. By prescription.—Presumption of lost grant.—A proprietor of land on a stream has a right to the water flowing past him in its natural course, undiminished in quantity & quality; & nothing short of a grant or twenty years' use, which presumes a grant, of water, in a particular way & for a special purpose, can entitle some one proprietor on a stream, in violation of this right of all, injuriously to divert or pen back the water from or upon proprietors living above or below him on the stream.—*McLAREN v. But if the effect produced on the land of B. by the act done in the land of A. had at all times occasioned a perceptible injury to B.'s property, there would have been sufficient ground to presume a grant from the ancestors of B. to the ancestors of A. of the right to so such act. A. has immemorially had, for watering his lands, a channel through his own field, in a porous soil, through the banks of which channel, when filled, the water percolates & thence passes through the contiguous soil of B. below the surface, without producing visible injury. B. builds a new house in his land, below the level of his soil, in the current of the percolating water. 1012. ———.—Every proprietor of lands on the banks of a natural stream has a right to use the water, provided he so uses it as not to work any material injury to the rights of the proprietors above or below him on the stream, & may begin to exercise that right whenever he will. By usage, he may acquire a right to use the water in a manner not justified by his natural right; but such acquired right has no operation against the natural rights of a landowner higher up the stream, unless the user by which it was acquired affects the use that he himself has made of the stream, or his power to use it, so as to raise the presumption of a grant, & so render the tenement above a servient tenement.

Plff. had immemorially enjoyed the benefit of irrigating certain meadows with the water of the Yeo, subject to the right of the occupier of a mill to detain the water for the use of his mill; & although the natural flow of the river was prevented by the exercise of the miller's right, the water came down at such times that plff. was enabled to irrigate his meadows effectually. But, of late, deft. had, for the purpose of irrigating his own adjacent land, from time to time diverted the water after it had passed the mill, & before it reached plff.'s meadows; & although it did not appear that the quantity of water which ultimately reached plff.'s meadows was thereby sensibly diminished, yet the effect was that the water was detained by the process of irrigation, & did not arrive till so late in the day that plff. was deprived of the power to use it fully:—Held: this detention of the water by deft. was a use of it which was in its character necessarily injurious to the natural rights of plff. as a riparian proprietor, & a ground of action.

Defts. did not admit that the river was vested in the plffs., & claimed a prescriptive right to take from the river superfluous water not required for the pur-

The user proved was that defts. took as much water as they required without regard to the needs of the navigation:—Held: the prescription must be limited & defined by the user, & the user being unlimited & not confined to water not needed for the discharge of the statutory duties of plff. co., the prescription was for a right which plffs. could not grant & which could not be obtained against them by prescription.—*A.-G. v. Sect. 2.—Rights relating to watercourses: Sub-sect. 2, C.: sub-sect. 3, A.]

1026. — Water percolating through bank—Injury to lower riparian owner.—A riparian proprietor abstracted water from a stream by pipes & syphons to supply his fish ponds, & thereby interfered with the flow of the water to the lower riparian proprietor's mill. The higher riparian proprietor made a claim that, prior to his use of the pipes & syphons to convey water from the stream to his fish ponds, he had obtained the same amount of water by percolation through the banks of the stream, & therefore he had a right to such water under Prescription Act. The lower riparian proprietor claimed a right of way by prescription to repair the bank of the stream where it ran through the higher riparian proprietor's property. The gate by which he entered the higher riparian proprietor's property had always been kept locked & the key kept by the higher riparian proprietor or his servants; but this key had always been asked for as a matter of right when it was required, & had never been refused:—Held: (1) the lower riparian proprietor had such a right as mentioned in Beeston v. Wate, No. 330, ante, to keep the bank in repair on the higher riparian proprietor's property, & for that purpose to have access to his premises. Such a right was from time immemorial, & the fact of the gate being kept locked did not affect such right; (2) the higher riparian proprietor could not justify abstracting water by pipes & syphons on the ground that if the bank had not been made watertight he would have been entitled to the same amount of water by percolation. Such a claim was not sustainable under the Prescription Act as a watercourse or otherwise. Injunction must be granted to restrain the abstraction of water from the stream by such pipes & syphons, & they must be taken up & removed; but the order must state that a riparian proprietor was not entitled to restrain absolutely another riparian proprietor from taking any water from the stream for legitimate purposes.—ROBERTS v. FELLOWES (1906), 94 L. T. 270.

1028. — Where no right to continuous flow.—Pltfs. were the owners in fee of an ancient tannery situated on either bank of a mill stream, & defts. were occupiers of an ancient corn mill further down the stream. The channel of the stream was an artificial one, constructed several centuries ago, & passing through the lands of various proprietors before reaching the tannery & the mill. The owners or occupiers of the mill were also in possession of & exercised the sole control over a weir & sluice gates built across the river E. at the point where the mill stream commenced, & they regulated the flow of the water into the mill stream & cleansed the bed & banks from the weir to the tannery. In Nov. 1907, defts. cut off the water supply & entering on the bed of the stream, within pltfs.' premises, removed therefrom certain pipes by means of which pltfs. had been in the habit of obtaining water for their tannery. In an action by pltfs. for an injunction to restrain the interference with their right to abstract water, & for trespass & damages:—Held: upon the facts & having regard to the conduct of the parties, & especially to the notorious & constant user of the water by pltfs. & their predecessors for nearly 250 years, pltfs. were the owners of the bed of the stream so far as it ran through their land; & the ct. was bound to infer that the mill stream was originally constructed for the mutual benefit of the tanner & the miller, & pltfs. were entitled, under a reservation made or agreement entered into when the channel was constructed, to a right to use the water for all reasonable purposes, not causing any sensible or material injury to the miller. Semble: where water flows through an artificial channel past the lands of several proprietors to serve the purposes of a proprietor lower down, the proper grant to presume, in the absence of all evidence as to the conditions upon which the channel was originally made would be the grant of an easement or right to the running of water; & prima facie, every proprietor of land on the banks of such a channel would be entitled to the moiety of the bed of the channel adjoining his land.

1032. — For exclusive use.—A stream was divided at a spot E., by stones placed there before living memory. Part of the water flowed to a farmyard, where it entered a trough used for watering cattle. The overflow of water from the trough found a way, not through any definite channel, but by percolation, into a river, which also received the main part of the stream. In 1847 W., who bought the land between E. & the river, together with a mill on the bank of that river, made a reservoir to collect the overflow at the trough, & conducted the water from the reservoir to the mill through a tunnel or covered drain. In 1867 W. conveyed to pltf. the mill, together with the right to all waters, reserving to himself a supply of water for domestic & other purposes. Defts., owners of land on the banks of 1045. ———.]—Pltf. & deft. were owners in fee of contiguous properties situate upon the slope of a hill. For upwards of seventy years pltf. & his predecessors in title had used for domestic & farming purposes at their own farmhouse the water flowing from a spring rising in their own land. The course of the water was from the spring at A. to a boundary of pltf.'s property at B., thence through deft.'s land by a banked-up channel to C., where it again entered pltf.'s land, & whence it flowed through a covered channel to his farmhouse. Deft.'s only user of the water had been by watering a few cattle depastured between the points B. & C., & pltf. & his predecessors had been in the habit of entering upon deft.'s land, & repairing the embankment between those points. In 1879 deft. inserted a pipe into the watercourse between the points B. & C., whereby he carried almost the whole of the water down through his own land to two houses recently erected by himself. Pltf.'s water supply at his farmhouse was thereby cut off, & he claimed an injunction, on the grounds that he had a prescriptive right to exclusive enjoyment, & that the embanked channel was constructed for the sole benefit of himself & his predecessors:—Held: in the absence of proof of the date at which the embanked channel was made, & the existence from time immemorial of a watercourse from the spring to pltf.'s farmhouse being an admitted fact, the watercourse must be considered to have been so made as to give all rights of riparian proprietors to deft. & his predecessors in title, & consequently deft. was within his rights in taking the water for the ordinary domestic use of his houses.—ROBERTS v. RICHARDS (1881), 50 L. J. Ch.

It was admitted that T. then owned lot 3, which included the river & the banks on either side, & that he built the dam & made the canal in question before 1845. By this dam the water of the river was turned into the canal, at the foot of which pltf.'s mill was situate. Defts. had a factory, also on the canal, above pltf.'s mill, & they diverted the water from the canal, to the injury of pltf.'s mill:—Held: pltf. having his land on the canal, had as appurtenant to his mill the rights of a riparian proprietor; the law applicable to natural streams was applicable also to the canal, which was a natural flow of water, though in an artificial channel; & a verdict for pltf. was sustained.—DIAMOND v. REDDICK (1875), 36 U. C. R. 391.—CAN.

1043 ii. ———.]—About the end of the eighteenth century an artificial channel or water-race was built across a lot subsequently acquired by pltf., for the purpose of carrying water from a stream above pltf.'s land to a mill below, the water being diverted into the channel by means of a dam. The channel & the banks on either side of it never formed part of pltf.'s land, having been excepted therefrom, so that their land was not contiguous to the water. Defts. diverted the water, & pltf. were thereby deprived of the use of the same for watering their cattle:—Held: pltf. were not riparian proprietors & could not claim any right by prescription to the use of the water.—BUCHANAN v. INGERSOLL WATERWORKS CO. (1899), 30 O. R. 456.—CAN.

1043 iii. ———.]—Riparian rights identical with those attaching to natural streams may be acquired by prescription in artificial watercourses of a permanent character. You must take into account first, the character of the watercourse, whether it is temporary or permanent; secondly, the circumstances under which it was presumably created; & thirdly, the mode in which it has been in fact used & enjoyed (STIRLING, L.J.).—BAILY & CO. v. At the date of the lease, & for eighteen years previously, the dwelling-house had received a water supply from iron pipes which conducted water from a reservoir held by the same lessors as lessees on a yearly tenancy. In 1885 the representatives of the lessors, who then held the yearly tenancy of the reservoir, became undertakers for the supply of water in the district under statutory powers. In 1902, by another Act, the undertaking including the yearly tenancy of the reservoir, was transferred to defendants, who threatened to cut off the supply of water if plaintiff did not pay for the supply:—Held: under the lease of 1880, a right to water flowing through the pipes passed to the lessee, & the fact that the lessors were only yearly tenants of the reservoir made no difference; the successors of the lessors in the water undertaking were bound so long as they continued to be yearly tenants of the reservoir.

land of another person. The borders abandoned the mine in 1856, since which the owners had been in possession. A bill by the owners to restrain the diversion of the watercourse by the owner of the land in which it rose was dismissed on the ground that there was no privity of estate between the owner & the borders, & that the owner, therefore, could not claim an easement by prescription on the ground of their enjoyment of it:—Held: an injunction ought to be granted, for it ought to be presumed that a right to use the waters had been acquired by arrangement with the owner of the mine as well as with the borders.—*IVIMEY v. (2) No action will lie for an injury by the diversion of an artificial watercourse, where, from the nature of the case, it is obvious that the enjoyment of it depends upon temporary circumstances & is not of a permanent character, & where the interruption is by a person who stands in the nature of a grantor. Where water has flowed in an artificial & covered watercourse for more than sixty years from a colliery into an immemorial & natural stream, upon whose banks plaintiff's mills are situated, plaintiff, in such case, has no right for diversion of the water of such artificial watercourse against a party through whose land it passes, but who does not claim under or who is unauthorised by the colliery owners. The case, however, would be different if the water were polluted; & the abstraction of water to the amount of 5 per cent. or its detention so as to occasion sensible inconvenience, will support an action for such injury.

The general proposition, that, under all circumstances, the right to watercourses, arising from enjoyment, is the same whether they be natural or artificial, cannot possibly be sustained. The 1053.1. Whether purpose of watercourse must be permanent or temporary.—Prior to 1894, H. & P. were tenants of adjoining farms on the same estate. In 1861 the predecessor of H., for the better drainage of his holding, constructed a drain through his lands to a neighbouring river, & at the same time a weir was constructed on the course of this drain, & a "carry" or conduit, by which some of the water was led in a different direction along H.'s side of the boundary between the two farms to the public road, & thence along that road, which ran through P.'s holding, supplying a tank on P.'s holding with water, & ultimately finding its way to the river at a point lower down its course. In 1896 H. altered the drainage of his lands & removed the "carry" so that it no longer supplied P.'s tank. P. entered on H.'s land & restored it. H. sued for damages for trespass, obstruction of the watercourse, & for flooding the lands. P. justified under an alleged lost grant & by prescription. At the trial the jury found a lost grant, but found there was no flow of water as of right prior to the drainage operations in 1861, & the judge directed a verdict for defendant. —Held: the drain was merely an artificial drain, not of a permanent character, but open to alteration or removal at H.'s pleasure, & P.'s enjoyment must be regarded as permissive only.—HANNA v. POLLOCK, [1898] 2 I. R. 532; [1900] 2 I. R. 604.—IR.

h. Whether exercisable against Crown.—A defendant, having for more than twenty years next before the action penned back water upon the land above him, by means of a dam erected on his own land, is protected by C. S. U. C., c. 88, 10 & 11 Viet., c. 5, although the land flooded belonged to the Crown during the greater part of that period.—BOWLEY v. WOODLEY (1852), 8 U. C. R. 318.—CAN.

k. ——Resp.'s predecessor in title applied in 1820 to the proper authority for leave to enter upon & cut up Crown land for the purpose of diverting the water of two springs on to his own land, & obtained permission, subject to the condition, "that by this diversion no injury is done to the properties or lands of others, or to the public roads, or anything else; otherwise, in that case, this favourable decision shall immediately cease." The diversion was made, & after a user for the period of prescription, right to artificial watercourses, as against the party creating them, surely must depend upon the character of the watercourse, whether it be of a permanent or temporary nature, & upon the circumstances under which it is created. The enjoyment for twenty years of a stream diverted or penned up by permanent embankments, clearly stands upon a different footing from the enjoyment of a flow of water originating in the mode of occupation or alteration of a person's property, & presumably of a temporary character, & liable to variation. The flow of water for twenty years from the eaves of a house could not give a right to the neighbour to insist that the house should not be pulled down or altered, so as to diminish the quantity of water flowing from the roof. The flow of water from a drain, for the purposes of agricultural improvements, for twenty years, could not give a right to the neighbour so as to preclude the proprietor from altering the level of his drains for the greater improvement of the land. The state of circumstances in such cases shows that one party never intended to give, nor the other to enjoy the use of the stream as a matter of right (POLLOCK, C.B.).—WOOD v. 1055. ———. The flow of water from a drain made for the purposes of agricultural improvements for twenty years, does not give a right to the neighbour, so as to preclude the proprietor from altering the level of his drain for the improvement of his land.

the circumstances under which it was created. This watercourse is clearly of a temporary nature only, & is dependent upon the mode which deft. may adopt in draining his land (PARKE, B.).—GREATREX v. HAYWARD (1853), 8 Exch. 201; 22 L. J. Ex. 137; 155 E. R. 1357.

(2) One who by lease or by licence from the owner of the soil has the right of digging & working clay, or minerals, thereunder, has such an interest in the soil as will entitle him to claim under Prescription Act, 1832 (c. 71), a right to the flow of water over the surface, by a twenty years' user.

The rights of tin-borders according to the customary law of Cornwall to the use of water within their tin-bounds, for the purpose of streaming their tin, will not prevent the acquisition by another of a prescriptive right under the above Act, to the enjoyment of the water by a twenty years' user; nor will this right be affected by an agreement with the tin-borders for a money payment to abstain from fouling the water by streaming their tin therein.—GAVED v. resp. applied in 1855 to have "the same privilege extended to him under the like conditions," which was granted subject to the condition that the privilege might be revoked at any time by the Govt., & that private & public interests were to be respected:—Held: the circumstances in which the original diversion was made in 1820 were not such as to prevent a prescriptive title beginning to run against the Govt., & after the prescriptive right had been acquired the subsequent act of resp. could not undo it, as it did not amount to a surrender nor estop him from claiming the right as against a grantee of the Govt.—FRENCH HOKK COMRS. v. HUGO (1885), 54 L. T. 92.—S. A.F.

1. Tenor of right not over of and.—Pltfs. & their predecessors in title had for many years, under a lease from B., a supply of water by pipes passing through the land of deft. B. did not in fact own the land, & had no right to make the lease. There was no evidence that the lease was made with the knowledge & consent of H., the predecessor in title of deft., the owner of the servient tenement:—Held: pltfs.' right to the easement could not be supported on the presumption of a lost grant & a continuous uninterrupted user for over 20 years referable to that title.—LOGGIE v. MONTGOMERY (1903), 3 E. L. R. 336; 38 N. B. R. 112.—CAN.

m. Seasons of drought—How far prescriptive right affected.—An easement which is not a customary right need not be reasonable. An easement may be established of the right to cause river water to flow across the servient tenement on to the dominant tenement for the purpose of irrigation, by means of embankments erected on the dominant tenement. In establishing such easements, it is immaterial whether the exercise of the right is continuous, provided it has been exercised for the statutory period, during seasons of drought, when it could be taken advantage of.—BUDHU MANDAL v. MALIAT MANDAL (1903), 1 L. R. 30 Calc. 1077.—IND.

n. Enjoyment while stream of no use—Cannot create prescriptive right.—Prior to 1849 pltf.'s predecessors had enjoyed a right to take water from a natural stream flowing near their building. In 1849 deft. railway co.,

course running to a house & garden, through the ground of another, it shall be presumed the owner of the house has a right to the watercourse, unless the other party can show a special licence, or an agreement to restrain it in point of time. There was no defined channel on deft.'s land into which the water so discharged could flow. Deft. having stopped up the pipe, an injunction was claimed to restrain him from continuing the obstruction. On appeal from the refusal of the injunction:—Held: the fact that the pipe was not connected with a defined channel into which the water conveyed by it could flow did not prevent its being a drain within Highway Act, 1835 (c. 50), s. 67; & in view of the length of time during which the drain had been used, a legal origin ought to be presumed for the right claimed, of passing water through the drain on to deft.'s land.—*A.-G. v. 1070. ———— Right to flow of pure water—Not by right to abstract water—To non-riparian tenement.—(1) A riparian proprietor cannot keep the land abutting on a river, the possession of which gives him his water rights, & at the same time, by granting a part of that land which does not abut on the river, transfer those rights, or any of them, & thus create a right in gross by assigning a portion of his rights appurtenant. The rights which a riparian proprietor has with respect to the water are entirely derived from the possession of land abutting on the river. If he grants away any portion of his land so abutting, the grantee becomes a riparian proprietor & has similar rights; but if he gives away a portion of his estate not abutting on the river, then the grantee of the land would have no water rights by virtue merely of his occupation, nor can he have them by express grant, except as against the grantor, so as to sue other

(2) The dominant & servient tenements have no apparent connection with one another. The abstraction of the water from the stream took place at a spot situated in other land than that called the dominant tenement & in no sort of way affected the enjoyment of the water at what is now called the servient tenement (*POLLOCK, C. 1071. For purposes of dominant tenement only.—The Metropolis Management Act, 1855 (c. 120), vested in plffs. an open sewer, called the Stamford Brook. The Metropolis Management Amendment Act, 1862 (c. 102), s. 61, enacted that no person should make or branch any sewer or drain, or make any opening into any sewer vested in the plffs., without their previous consent in writing; provided that any person might, with such consent, at his own expense, make or branch any drain into any such sewer in such manner as plffs. should direct. After the passing of the Act of 1855, plffs. allowed four old cottages belonging to defts. on land just outside the Metropolitan area & bounded by the Stamford Brook, to continue to drain through an eighteen-inch brick drain into Stamford Brook. They subsequently, at the request of defts., who paid half the cost, covered in the brook & converted it into a main sewer. When they did this, they made a drain-eye in the newly covered-in sewer as a communication for the eighteen-inch drain. Defts. afterwards built other cottages on the same land, & claimed the right to use the eighteen-inch drain for the purpose of draining the new cottages through the communication into the sewer:—Held: as defts. had not proved any prescriptive right to use the eighteen-inch drain for the sewage of the new cottages, nor obtained the written consent of plffs. for that purpose under sect. 61 of the Act of 1862, they were not entitled to use the eighteen-inch drain for any other purposes than those for which they used it when the brook was covered in. Therefore, plffs. were entitled to an injunction to restrain defts. from permitting their additional cottages, or any building other than the four old cottages, to drain into the Stamford Brook.

in constructing a line, interfered with or tapped the subterranean sources of this stream which ceased to flow, the water which had supplied it finding its way to the surface of a cutting on the line. The co. conveyed this water away in a new artificial channel. The water of this new stream was in 1898 used, but in this year the co. used the water for their own purposes, & plff. who had been taking water since 1849 for domestic purposes brought an action for disturbance of prescriptive rights. The jury found that the stream was substituted for the old, & that the co. had not constructed the channel until they required the water for their own purposes:—Held: this new artificial watercourse being made for the co.'s benefit on their land, no enjoyment of the water thereof, while the water was of no use to the co., could create a prescriptive right in plff.—*M'Evoy v. 1073. ————[In an action by a landowner against a corp., the urban sanitary authority for the borough of D., for an injunction to restrain them from discharging or allowing to be discharged sewage upon his lands from the sewers vested in them so as to cause a nuisance, defts. set up a prescriptive right based on the presumption of a lost grant by pltf.'s predecessors in title to trustees for the benefit of the inhabitants of the borough to drain all sewage from any tenements built or to be built within the borough, & to discharge the same on pltf.'s lands. This claim of right failed. It was proved, however, that there were a number of houses in the borough in respect of which prescriptive rights had been acquired to pass sewage into & along the sewers, & that there were other houses the connections of which with the sewers had been made with the consent or by the acquiescence of defts. :—Held: an injunction could not be granted so as to interfere with the prescriptive rights that had been acquired, nor to oblige defts. to stop up the connections of the other houses which they had sanctioned; but an injunction must be granted to restrain defts. from authorising or directing any sewage to flow or be discharged on to pltf.'s lands from sewers vested in them as the sanitary authority. —*BROWN v. degrees renders water less fit for condensing purposes. It was also deposed that on another occasion, in consequence of the increased temperature, pltf.'s engine worked "nearly half a stroke per minute less" than the usual rate of twenty eight strokes per minute. Upon motion for a decree the ct. granted a perpetual injunction, restraining defts. from discharging heated water, so as to increase the temperature of the water which pltf. used for condensing; being of opinion that the evidence, exclusive of that as to the actual diminution in the working of the engine, showed a material interference with the quality of the water to which pltf. was entitled under the demise; & that the question whether such interference was such as to give him a right to damages was one which he was not obliged to try.—*TIPPING v. 1096. — [No property in water when polluted.] — No one has a right to use his own land in such a way as to be a nuisance to his neighbour, & therefore if a man puts filth or poisonous matter on his land he must take care that it does not escape so as to poison water which his neighbour has a right to use although his neighbour may have no property in such water at the time it is fouled.

Pltf. & deft. were adjoining landowners & had each a deep well on his own land, pltf.'s land being at a lower level than deft.'s. Deft. turned sewage from his house into his well & thus polluted the water that percolated underground from deft.'s to pltf.'s land & consequently the water, which came into pltf.'s well from such percolating water when he used his well by pumping came adulterated with the sewage from deft.'s well :—Held : pltf. had a right of action against deft. for so polluting the source of supply although until pltf. had appropriated it he had no property in the percolating water under his land & although he appropriated such water by the artificial means of pumping. —*BALLARD v. 1099.—Flow to dominant tenement diminished.—A landowner granted to a co. all the watercourses, dams, & reservoirs upon certain lands of his, which watercourses, dams, & reservoirs were laid down upon the annexed plan, which was to be taken as part of the deed, & were hereon coloured blue, & also the several streams & springs of water flowing into or feeding the said watercourses, dams, & reservoirs, with right for the co. solely to take & use the water from the said springs or streams of water, watercourses, dams, & reservoirs, with powers to cleanse & repair, & with all such other powers as should be requisite for enabling the co. to enjoy the premises thereby granted. The grantor was to be at liberty to use the waste or overflow water from the dams or reservoirs of the co., but was not to exercise this power if the co. resolved that its exercise would be injurious to them. The property coloured blue on the plan consisted of an artificial watercourse, partly covered & partly open, the dimensions of various parts of which were specified on the plan, & in some cases it was noted on the plan that they might be enlarged to a certain extent. Several springs & streams feeding the watercourse were marked on the plan. The watercourse, it appeared, was large enough to carry off all the water which flowed into it except after heavy rain, but at one point of its course underground there was a contraction of the channel which after heavy rain backed up the water & caused a considerable overflow over a weir, of which overflow the grantor for many years had the benefit. The grantees having occasion for more water proceeded to remove the above obstruction, so as to allow the whole of the water which came into the watercourse during heavy rains to run down into their reservoir:—Held: the grant was a grant of the artificial channel, of the definite springs & streams on the land, & of such other water as should find its way into & run down the channel as it stood, & not a grant of all the water on the land, & that the grantees had no right to alter the levels of or enlarge the channel so as to enable it to carry off all the water that ran into it in times of heavy rain.—TAYLOR v. ST. HELENS (CORPN.) (1877), 6 Ch. D. 264; 46 L. J. Ch. 857; 37 L. T. 253; 25 W. R. 885, C. A.

These rights became vested in defendants. A local board of health having altered the level of a sewer into which the drain emptied, the drain became useless unless deepened. Defendants therefore entered on the land, & relaid the drain two feet deeper than before:—Held: the limitation was intended to affect the use to which the drain might be put, & not to limit the power to keep it in an efficient state, & whether the deed created a tenancy in common or only an easement, defendants had not exceeded the powers reserved by it.—FINLINSON v. Deft. constructed a pier projecting across the channel through which the water was discharged from waste sluices into the tailrace & which it was alleged would throw back the water across the tailrace to plaintiff's injury:—Held: plaintiff, irrespective of proof to actual damage was entitled to an injunction restraining deft. from continuing an obstruction in alieu fluminis.—PALMER v. —Lands, partly adjoining a river, were demised for 990 years, by indenture, in which the lessor granted to the lessee liberty to cut a goit or sluice out of the said river, at a proper & convenient distance above a certain weir, in the most convenient line through certain closes of the lessor, into a close, intended for a mill dam, part of the demised lands; & from time to time, & at any time to turn the water of the river through the goit; & liberty from time to time & at all times during the term, to view, examine, carry & lay down materials, & repair & amend the goit or sluice & other works specified, when so made as aforesaid, or any of them, when & as often as need or occasion should be, making reasonable satisfaction to the lessor, his heirs & assigns, for all damage to be done or occasioned thereby to the grass or herbage of the lessor, etc.; & the lessee covenanted that he, his exors., etc., would make reasonable satisfaction to the lessor, his heirs & assigns, for all damages to be occasioned to the lands of the lessor by the lessee, his exors., etc., in exercise of any of the liberties, privileges & powers by the indenture granted, except for the term of two years next ensuing the commencement of the rent, during which time no trespass or damage should be charged or paid for. In an action of trespass against the lessee for widening a goit on the lessor's soil to the extent of nine additional feet, deft. pleaded that the goit was made in due exercise of the liberty above mentioned, but that, the same not having been made of a sufficient width, & completed to a small & insufficient width only, viz. nine feet, so that, without widening it as after mentioned, deft. could not enjoy the demised tenements as he was entitled by the indenture to do, he, in further due exercise, etc., cut down the sides of the goit & widened it, justifying the alleged trespasses. Replication that, before the expiration of two years, etc., the lessee, in due exercise of the liberty, etc., made & completed a goit, being the goit in the plea mentioned, of the width therein mentioned; & the same remained & was used by the lessee continually from the last mentioned day until deft., under colour of the indenture, committed the alleged trespasses. On demurrer to the replication:—Held: the privilege given to deft. by the deed was to make a goit once only, & after having completed a goit, he could not justify entering pltf.'s land again & widening the goit from nine feet to eighteen, for the power to make a goit was exhausted, & the widening was not a repairing or amending within the meaning of the deed.—BOSTOCK v. Deft. did not know that the drain turned back, & ran through his premises under those of pltf., nor was the defective state of the drain attributable to any negligence of deft.:—Held: deft. was liable for the damage pltf. had so sustained, as it was deft.'s duty to keep the sewage from passing from his own premises to those of pltf. otherwise than along the old drain through which only pltf., as the occupier of the servient tenement, was bound to receive it.—HUMPHRIES v. 1119. — — Under covenant.]—The owners in fee of the G. estate by deed of 1808, confirmed by private Act of Parliament, granted to deft. corp., for the purposes of the supply authorised by their Acts a perpetual easement of taking & using surface water from a specified watershed area on pltf.'s estate. The water was conducted by streams & channels, partly natural & partly artificial, to ponds or reservoirs existing on the estate, from which there were streams & channels also partly natural & partly artificial for taking off the overflow from the ponds, the corp. covenanting "at all times to maintain & keep all their works now made & hereafter to be made" on the G. estate in good & sufficient repair & condition, & not to do or occasion any avoidable damage or injury to the estate. Water having escaped & overflowed from the ponds & streams & done damage to the estate:—Held: the covenant covered works not made by the corp. & was not confined to artificial watercourses but extended to works existing on the estate at the date of the covenant, including every natural & artificial constituent utilised for the services of the corp.'s water system.—EVAN-THOMAS v. 1122. Obligation to cleanse.]—Declaration in case, alleging that pltf. was reversioner of a house, garden, & premises, then occupied by his tenant, J.; that deft. was possessed & in the occupation of a close near to the house etc.; & that before & at the time etc. there was a watercourse in the close, & deft., by reason of his possession of the close, ought to have scoured & kept open the watercourse so often as was necessary, to prevent the water from being obstructed, & from running out of the watercourse unto, into, & under the said house etc. Breach, that deft., during the tenant's occupation, wrongfully permitted the watercourse to be obstructed for want of proper cleansing, inasmuch that the water was penned back, & ran into & damaged the said house, to the injury of pltf.'s reversion. Plea, that a wall, parcel of pltf.'s said premises, was situate near to the said watercourse & to deft.'s close; & by reason of the said wall being, through the neglect of J., the tenant, in that behalf, ruinous, etc., part of the said wall, near to the said watercourse, before & at the times etc., fell down, & by means thereof, rubbish etc., being part of the materials, fell into the watercourse, & the same was thereby choked up as in the declaration etc., & the water for a short time unavoidably was penned back etc., & ran out, as in the declaration mentioned. Averment, that deft., in a short & reasonable time after he had notice that the watercourse was so choked up etc., & before action brought, cleansed out the same, so that the water flowed as it ought to do. On general demurrer:—Held: the alleged default of the tenant was no answer, the plea not showing that the owners & occupiers of the estate for the time being were bound to repair the wall which fell, & deft. could not excuse himself by averring that he repaired as soon as he had notice of the injury, for he became liable at the time when the injury occurred. So if he had alleged that he repaired as soon as possible after the

a. Right of way — Drawing water from springs.]—Pltf. claimed through deft.'s predecessor in title the right to use two springs, C. & E., under conveyances in 1841 & 1843 of lands north of the springs. One conveyance granted the sole & perpetual right to spring C. together with the right to use a road from the southern boundary of the land granted to the spring; the other granted the sole & perpetual use of & right to the water of spring E. without indicating the manner in which the water was to be approached or its enjoyment had. Deft. was the owner of the land to the south upon which the springs were situated. The water had been carried from the springs by means of pipes through deft.'s land to pltf.'s land, from 1861 to 1882 or 1883, when deft. tore up the pipes, insisting that the then owner of pltf.'s land had no right to maintain them, & thereupon an arrangement was made under which the pipes were again put down with the addition of certain troughs for the convenience of deft.'s cattle:—Held: pltf. had a right of access to spring C. by the road mentioned, & to spring E. by a convenient road to be laid out, but had no right to the easement of conveying the water by pipes through deft.'s land.—McKAY v. BRUCE (1891), 20 O. R. 709.—CAN.

There was an enclosed well on A.'s land, out of which some four or five families admittedly regularly took water, B.'s family being amongst the number. To an action of trespass brought by A. B. in his defence relied on a claim of right, founded on lost grant or alternatively upon a demise, to take water from the well on A.'s land, & counterclaimed for interference by A. with the exercise of the right claimed:—Held: on the Plea that, by custom, the inhabitants of a township had a right to take water for domestic purposes from a well in the close; that plff. choked it up, & justifying the acts complained of as done by inhabitants of the township to clear out the well. Issue thereon. On the trial it appeared that the inhabitants had, from time immemorial, taken the water from the well. About fifty years before the action the locus in quo was inclosed under a special inclosure Act, incorporating 41 Geo. 3 (c. 109). Neither in the special Act, nor in the award of the comrs., was any mention made of this well, or of any access to it. Verdict for defts., with leave to move:—Held: the right to take water from the well was not extinguished by the inclosure; & whether the ancient right of access to the well for that purpose was or was not extinguished, & semble: it was not extinguished, the inhabitants might in other modes legally get access to the well, so that the fifty years' enjoyment de facto since the inclosure might have a legal origin; & the verdict for defts. stood.

In looking at the extinguishing clause (sect. 14) I find mention of rights of common—& other rights which I take to mean rights to take the produce of the earth; . . . but [the right to the well] is neither directly nor indirectly extinguished (CROMPTON, J.).—*RACE v. (2) Until that is interfered with he has no legal ground of complaint, although, in fact, something may have been done which, without his knowledge, has occasioned results that will afterwards affect his property.

A. was the owner of certain houses standing on land which was surrounded by the lands of B., C. & D. E. was the owner of mines running underneath the lands of all these persons. He worked the mines in such a manner, without actual negligence, that the lands of B., C. & D. sank in; & after more than six years' interval their sinking occasioned an injury to the houses of A.:—Held: a right of action accrued to A. when this injury actually occurred; (3) his right was not barred by Stat. Limitations.—*BACKHOUSE v. b. By repurchase.]—The owner of a mill property, with the right to use all the water of the stream on which the mill was, sold a portion of the land, & by a separate instrument bound himself to permit his vendee to use a certain quantity of the water to drive machinery to be erected on such portion. Afterwards, finding that the quantity of water which the vendee withdrew from the stream impaired the effective working of his mill, he repurchased the lot & easement, receiving a conveyance thereof, & giving back a mtge. to secure part of the purchase money, & afterwards, the purchase money having been satisfied, procured his vendee to make a deed direct to K., who had purchased the lot & easement, with notice of all the facts. On a bill filed by a person who had obtained title to the mill & premises under a mtge. executed by the owner before the repurchase of the lot & easement:—Held: neither the

g. Artificial support substituted for natural support—Must be sufficient.—Held: was entitled to the lateral support of defts.' land, in which they made excavations whereby pltf.'s land was damaged:—Held: in substituting artificial support for the natural

Where A. dug a well near B.'s land, which sank in consequence, & a building erected on it within twenty years fell, & it was proved that if the building had not been on B.'s land, the land would still have sunk, but the damage to B. would have been inappreciable:—Held: B. had no right of action against A.—SMITH v. THACKERAY (1866), L. R. 1 C. P. 564; Har. & Ruth. 615; 35 L. J. C. P. 276; 14 L. T. 761; 12 Jur. N. S. 545; 14 W. R. 832.

1148. Right confined to natural undisturbed land.—Effect of previous excavation under adjacent land.]—Between the land of plffs. & that of defts., who were owners of a colliery, there was an intermediate piece of land, the coal under which had been worked out some years before by a third party. The effect of the cavity in the intermediate land was, that when defts. worked the coal under their land, subsidence was caused in the surface of plffs.' land. It was admitted that if the intermediate land had been in its natural state no injury would have been caused to plffs. by defts.' workings:—Held: plffs. had no right of action against defts.

The support to which a landowner is entitled from the adjacent land is confined to such an extent of adjacent land as in its natural undisturbed state was sufficient to afford the requisite support.—BIRMINGHAM CORPN. v. ALLEN (1877), 6 Ch. D. 284; 46 L. J. Ch. 673; 37 L. T. 207; 42 J. P. 184; 25 W. R. 810, C. A.

1149. Injury to copyhold land—Waiver by tenant of right to compensation.—The owner of freehold land & copyhold land adjacent to each other sold the copyhold land, & by a deed of even date with the surrender the purchaser covenanted & granted that the vendor, his heirs, etc., might work in the adjoining freehold land, without being liable to make compensation for any injury caused by such working to certain buildings, authorised by the deed to be erected on the copyhold land, & that the purchaser, his heirs, etc., would indemnify the vendor, his heirs, etc., against any claims for such damage. This deed was not entered on the ct. rolls, nor referred to in the surrender. The copyhold land was afterwards conveyed enfranchised by the purchaser & the lords of the manor to the Church Building Comrs., under whom plff. took. Neither the lords of the manor, nor the comrs., nor plff., had notice of the deed. Deft., who took the adjoining freehold land under the original vendor, having by working the mines in it caused the land of plff. to sink, & damaged the buildings thereon:—Held: he was not pro-

Semble: if both lands had been freehold deft. would still have been liable.—RICHARDS v. HARPER (1866), L. R. 1 Exch. 199; 35 L. J. Ex. 130; 30 J. P. 602; 12 Jur. N. S. 770; 14 W. R. 643.

Sec. generally, MINES.

(1) Action on the case by the occupier of the surface of land for negligently & improperly, & without leaving any sufficient pillars & supports, & contrary to the custom of mining in the country where, etc., working the subjacent minerals, per quod the surface gave way. It was proved that plff. was in occupation of the surface, & deft. of the subjacent minerals; but there was no evidence how the occupation of the superior & inferior strata came into different hands. The surface was not built upon. The jury found that defts. had worked the mines, carefully & according to custom, but without leaving sufficient support for the surface:—Held: plff. was entitled to have the verdict entered for him; for that, of common right, the owner of the surface is entitled to support from the subjacent strata; & if the owner of the minerals removes them, it is his duty to leave sufficient support for the surface in its natural state.

(2) The right to lateral support from adjoining soil is not, like the support of one building upon another, supposed to be gained by grant, but is a right of property passing with the soil. If the owner of two adjoining closes conveys away one of them, the alienee, without any grant for that purpose, is entitled to the lateral support of the other close the very instant when the conveyance is executed, as much as after the expiration of twenty years or any longer period (LORD CAMPBELL, C.J.).—*HUMPHRIES v. 1157. — — — — —.]—Before 1757 the lord of a manor had the right to work mines & minerals under the waste lands of the manor so as to let down the surface, provided enough pasturage was left to satisfy the rights of the commoners. By an inclosure Act of 1757 the waste lands were enclosed & allotted, & the lord of the manor was empowered to work the mines & minerals under the allotments as fully & freely as he might have done if the Act had not passed, & that without making or paying any satisfaction for so doing. A compensation clause in the Act provided that any damage done to an allottee by the exercise of the powers reserved to the lord should be paid for by an assessment upon the occupiers of the other allotments:—Held: upon the true construction of the Act, the common law right of the surface owners to the support of the surface was not taken away by express words or necessary implication.

Whenever the minerals belong to one person & the surface to another, the law presumes that the surface owner has a right to support, unless the language of the instrument regulating their rights, or other evidence, clearly shows the contrary (LORD LOREBURN, L.C.).—BUTTERKNOWLE COLLIERY Co. v. 1164. Running silt.—Pltf. was the owner of land with houses on it. The adjoining land belonged to defts., a gas co., incorporated by special Act, with power to purchase land by agreement only, & subject to Gasworks Clauses Acts, 1847 (c. 15) & 1871 (c. 41). Under their statutory powers defts. proceeded to excavate their land for the purpose of erecting a gasometer. In so doing they penetrated an underground stratum of quicksand, or sand loaded with stagnant water, geologically known as "running silt," which extended under pltf.'s land as well as their own the silt or sand largely preponderating over the water. In draining their excavation defts. withdrew a large quantity of the running silt from under pltf.'s land & thus caused a subsidence of the surface with consequent structural injury to his houses. The liability of defts. to proceedings for any "nuisance" caused by them in the execution of their works was preserved by Gasworks Clauses Act, 1871 (c. 41), s. 9:—Held: pltf.'s land was supported, not by a stratum of water, but by a bed of wet sand or running silt; & as defts. had caused the subsidence of pltf.'s land by sequent injury to buildings on the surface:—Held: the party who withdraws a natural support or the artificial support which has come in place of the natural support, does so at his peril.—BALD v. ALLOA COLLIERY CO. (1854), 16 Duml. (Ct. of Sess.) 870; 26 Sc. Jur. 437.—SCOT.

1167. Brine.—Pltfs. were the owners of a group of rock-salt mines which had for many years been flooded with brine, by reason of the fact that the working of the mines had caused the ground above them to subside, with the result that surface water found its way down to the beds of rock-salt below, where it became saturated with the salt.

These mines had for many years been connected with one another by means of old underground channels & passages, which it was no longer possible to close, & they formed one large reservoir of brine. Into this reservoir there also found its way a certain quantity of other brine which came through fissures in the soil from land outside pltfs.' property, but a substantial portion of the brine therein was formed by the dissolution of pltfs.' salt rock in the manner above mentioned. Defts., in the exercise of a licence to pump brine granted to them by the previous owner of one of pltfs.' mines, pumped large quantities of brine from the said mine & from the reservoir & appropriated it for their own profit:—Held: defts. were not guilty of any actionable wrong in so doing, notwithstanding that they thereby abstracted salt which had formed part of pltfs.' rock, & that the continuance of the pumping would cause fresh surface water to dissolve further portions of pltfs.' rock into brine, which in its turn would be abstracted by defts.' pumps.—*SALT UNION, LTD. v. B. (a).

1168 i. Support from adjacent land—(general rule.)—Pltf.'s house adjoining land & a wall thereon owned by deft. was damaged by deft. having negligently excavated the soil & pulled down the wall:—Held: as deft. had not complied with Sydney Improvement Act, sect. 50, by shoring up & underpinning pltf.'s house, he had been guilty of negligence.—*CLANEY v. 1168 iv. — — — — —.] —An excavation made in his land by deft. W., the predecessor in title of deft. A., extended to the boundary-line between his land & that of pltf. After the excavation was made, W. built a retaining wall for the purpose of providing support to pltf.'s land. This retaining wall got out of repair & failed to answer the purpose for which it was built, & as a result of this a subsidence of pltf.'s land occurred & the soil fell into the excavation. Owing to the condition of the wall, this occurred after A. became the owner of W.'s land:—Held: deft. A. was responsible for the feet of the wall, a portion of the wall from its foundation fell into B.'s ground which at the point in question sloped down from the wall at a steep gradient. A. brought an action for damages against B.:—Held: It had workings, & £50 damages caused in part by the excavation under the garden:—Held: (1) inasmuch as the sinking of pltf.'s land was in no way caused by the weight of the house, pltf. was entitled to recover whether he had acquired a right to support for his foundations by deft.'s soil or not; (2) although the excavation under the garden contributed to the extent of £50 to cause the damage pltf. was entitled to the whole £300, because, if deft. had not done the wrongful act complained of, no part of the damage would have occurred.

o. — Old & defective wall.]—An old retaining wall built on a sloping piece of ground belonging to A. was the boundary of his property. During excavations by B. the adjoining proprietor, on his own ground, within five

1178. —.]—Deft. engaged a contractor to build a warehouse for him on his, deft.'s, premises. The contractor's workmen made a deep excavation for the foundation of the warehouse on deft.'s land, close to the boundary line, between deft.'s & pltf.'s premises. In consequence of the excavation, pltf.'s yard wall adjoining gave way & fell in; & the workmen, without any directions from deft., carried off the materials of the fallen wall. Pltf.'s house was also injured by the excavation. Neither the house nor the wall had been built ten years, & pltf.'s premises were not entitled to any support from deft.'s land. In an action by pltf. against deft. for wrongfully & negligently excavating to the injury of pltf.'s premises, & for wrongfully carrying away the materials of the wall, the judge told the jury that as deft. was in possession of the land adjoining pltf.'s, he was answerable for the wrongful acts of any person allowed by deft. to go upon his premises for the purpose of erecting the warehouse there; & that the existence of any contract between the contractor & deft. was immaterial; & that if the jury should be of opinion that the workmen, whilst they were on deft.'s land by his permission, for the purpose of erecting the warehouse, had, from want of due care, injured pltf.'s wall & buildings, & had carried away from deft.'s land materials belonging to pltf., deft. was liable for the injuries arising from their acts:—Held: the direction was wrong; the action was not maintainable without proof that pltf.'s premises were entitled to support from deft.'s land; & deft. could not be liable, though the acts were done on his premises, the workmen committing them not being his servants. & the acts not being done by his direction.—GAYFORD v. 1180. — House built adjacent to excavated land—Excavation known to defendant.]—Pltf. was owner of a house erected in 1834 on solid ground. Previously to the building of the house a portion of the minerals had been gotten under a garden which adjoined the house. In 1838 a portion of the minerals was gotten under deft.'s land which adjoined the garden. In 1855 deft. commenced getting out the rest of the minerals under his land. In 1857 pltf.'s land sank, & the house was injured by deft.'s mining operations. It was found by the jury that the sinking of pltf.'s land was caused by deft.'s workings; that some damage would have happened, but not to the same extent, if the garden ground had been left solid; that deft. knew of the excavations under the garden; that the land would have sunk in just the same whether there was a house on it or not; & that the damage to pltf.'s house by the sinking was £300, £250 occasioned solely by deft.'s

1187. —.— House erected within twenty years.—Where the working of mines, in however careful a manner, has caused a subsidence of the adjacent land, the owner is entitled to recover in respect of damages to buildings thereon, although erected within twenty years, provided their weight did not contribute to the subsidence.

In 1833, a manufactory was erected on a close, & in 1841, & between that time & 1849, the buildings were enlarged. In Mar. 1842, the close & buildings, which were leased for a term which expired in Oct. 1851, were conveyed in fee by S. the owner, to C. C. died in 1849, & in Nov. 1851, the devisees under his will conveyed the close & buildings to pltf. in fee, who before 1849 was assignee of the term & occupied the buildings. In 1849 & 1850 defts., in getting coal from their mines, near but not immediately adjoining the close, caused the surface to subside, by which the buildings were injured. The devisees of C. did not thereby, in fact, sustain any damage, inasmuch as they incurred no expense, & continued to receive the full rent for the premises, & upon the sale thereof obtained the full value, without reference to any injury thereto, of which they were ignorant, by the mining operations. Subsequently to the sale to pltf., the working of the mines under lands near to but not adjoining the close on which the buildings stood, occasioned a further subsidence. No damage was done by the working of the mines subsequently to July, 1852, but the subsidence of the ground continued, the consequence of the previous mining operations. The mining was skillfully conducted, & the buildings did not contribute to the subsidence. In Aug. 1855, pltf. brought an action against deft.:—Held: (1) he was entitled to recover damages in respect of the deterioration in value of the manufactory, the machinery broken, the increased expense of keeping it in repair & working order, & the diminished profits both in respect of his occupation before & after the purchase; (2) the devisees of C. might maintain an action for the injury to their reversion during the subsistence of the lease as trustees, & for the benefit of the vendee.—*STROYAN v. Deft., who was the purchaser of lot 6, excavated the land as required to build according to the said conditions, & in consequence of this pltf.'s building fell:—Held: as the excavations were authorised by the conditions of sale, & were made therefore with the licence of G., the vendor, pltf. could not sue for the injury he had sustained by his building being so deprived of the lateral support of the land in lot 6.

1194. ————J.—Pltf., in his declaration, complained that he, being possessed of a certain dwelling-house, & deft. being also possessed of a certain other dwelling-house next adjoining that of pltf., deft. proceeded to pull down his house for the purpose of re-building another house on the site thereof; & that deft.'s contriving, etc., by his workmen, etc., behaved & conducted himself so carelessly, negligently & improperly in & about digging & clearing the ground for the foundation of the house so built on the site of his first mentioned house, & in & about underpinning the party wall between that house & the house of pltf., etc., that by & through the carelessness, etc., of deft. & his agents, the party wall, & all the walls, floors, beams, etc., of the house of pltf. were greatly sunk, cracked, weakened, & injured, etc.:—Held: the declaration disclosed a good cause of action, for that deft. had no right to underpin the party wall either partially or wholly, unless that could be done without injury to pltf.'s house, even although it might be doubtful whether the interests of the parties were several, or whether they stood in the relation of tenants in common.—*BRADBEE v. 1195. ————J.—(1) A water co. in exercise of statutory powers laid down pipes under the surface of a street, & the highway authority of the district afterwards, in exercise of the power in that behalf given by Metropolis Management Act, 1855 (c. 120), s. 98, proposed to lower the surface of the street, & to do so without altering or disturbing the position of the pipes, but so as to leave only a few inches of soil over them. In an action by the water co. to restrain the highway authority from lowering the surface of the street without at the time lowering the pipes of the co. to a corresponding depth under the new surface:—Held: the above sect. did not impose upon the highway authority, when exercising the power thereby given to them of altering the level of a street, any express or implied duty to exercise also at their own expense the power by the same sect. given of altering the position of the pipes thereunder, for the benefit of the water co., in a case where the highway authority did not require for their own purposes to interfere with such pipes.

(2) Pltfs. can have no higher claim to consideration at the hands of defts. than the owner of a house, for which no right of support from the adjoining house had been acquired, would be entitled to claim against the adjoining owner, who in pulling his own house down withdraws support to which his neighbour is not entitled. It is clear in such case that, though the pulling-down owner must be careful to interfere as little as possible with the adjoining house, he is certainly not called upon to take active steps for its protection, as, for instance, by shoring it up. There is a broad distinction between exercising a right with reasonable care so as not to do avoidable damage, & taking active measures to insure the continuance of something that is not a right in the adjoining owner (COLLINS, L.J.).—*SOUTHWARK & VAUXHALL WATER CO. v. 1196. Compensation for negligently removing house—Under statutory powers.—A railway co. for the purposes of their undertaking took certain houses standing in a row & structurally connected with the adjoining tenements. In removing one of such houses the stability of the neighbouring house, which had not been taken by the co., was impaired, & the owners sustained damage as well to that house as to others in their occupation. On bill filed for an injunction, it appearing that by due precaution such damage might have been avoided:—Held: an injunction was rightly granted, the case not being one for compensation under Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845 (c. 18), s. 68, & an inquiry as to damages would be directed.—*BISCOE v. 1214 I. Warranty of support.—Grant of land for building purposes.—Pltfs. & defts. were adjoining owners of land. Pltfs. derived under a grant, made for building purposes, more than twenty years prior to the injuries complained of. The grantors were the predecessors in title of defts. Subsequently to the date of the grant, & after the building of a house by pltfs. on their land, a railway cutting was made near the locality; but it did not appear that any injury was thereby caused to pltfs.' house. Defts. having, however, piled large quantities of stones on their lands, immediately adjoining pltfs.' house, cracks appeared in the walls of the latter, & pltfs. brought an action to recover damages caused by the deprivation of the right of support.—Held: pltfs.' right to support, whether acquired by grant or prescription, was not in any way affected by the alteration of circumstances caused by the making of the railway cutting.—*GREEN v. In 1802 defts. became the lessees of an adjacent coal mine & worked it, & in 1804 G., the owner of land adjoining to & immediately intervening between pltf.'s said land & defts.' mine, recovered damages from defts. in an action for an injury accruing from the sinking of his land by reason of their workings. In an action for damages to pltf.'s houses by their sinking in consequence of the mining operations of defts. under G.'s land, the jury, in answer to four distinct questions by the judge, found that defts.' working caused the injury complained of; that such workings would not have caused it, or any part of it, if the intervening ground & the ground on which pltf.'s houses stood had been left in the solid; that defts. so far knew the ground had not been left in the solid that they ought to have concluded that their operations would be dangerous to the houses; that pltf.'s land & the adjoining intervening land had been mined for more than twenty years, so as to make defts.' operations dangerous; & a verdict was thereupon directed for pltf. Upon a rule for a new trial, on the ground of misdirection in telling the jury to consider whether the ground under pltf.'s land & under G.'s land was in the solid, instead of putting each point to them separately, & in not asking them to find whether defts. or the owners of the land knew of the excavations for twenty years:—Held: the findings of the jury in answer to the questions put to them did not amount to establishing the fact of negligence on the part of defts., which was necessary in order to sustain pltf.'s verdict, & as the question of negligence had not been distinctly put & answered by the jury, the rule for a new trial must be made absolute.

1223. ——— From subjacent party wall.]—Defts. were the owners of two houses in a street, numbered 38 & 40, & of a gateway under 40 & adjoining 38. In 1857 they demised the house No. 38 for a term of 21 years, the lease containing a covenant by the lessee to repair all walls & party walls belonging to the premises. In 1865 they granted a lease to pltf. of the house No. 40 for a term of eleven years, subject to a similar covenant to repair walls & party walls. The wall on the side of the gateway separating it from No. 38 was a party wall between the gateway & the house No. 38 to the height of the first floor. The house of pltf., No. 40, was built so as to extend in part over the top of the gateway & to rest upon this party wall between the gateway & the house No. 38, & to be supported by it. Pltf.'s covenant to repair did not extend to this wall, & there was no covenant by defts. to keep it in repair. In 1874 it was discovered that the walls of that part of No. 40 which was above the gateway were giving way. The damage was owing to the failure of support from the party wall, which had bulged in consequence of the pressure upon it from pltf.'s premises:—Held: there was no implied covenant on the part of defts. to support pltf.'s premises, although it might be an answer to an action upon pltf.'s covenant to repair, that the repair had been rendered impossible by the neglect of some precedent obligation on the part of defts.—*COLEBECK v. 1230. Substitution of artificial support for natural support.]—ROWBOTHAM v. WILSON, No. 8, ante.

1231. ———.]—(1) A man, who orders a work to be executed on his own premises, lawful in itself, but from which, in the natural course of things, injurious consequences to his neighbour must be expected to arise, unless means are adopted by which such consequences may be prevented, is bound to see to the doing of that which is necessary to prevent the mischief; & cannot relieve himself of his responsibility by employing some one else to do what is necessary to prevent the act he had ordered to be done from becoming wrongful. Pltf. & deft. were respective owners of two adjoining houses, pltf. being entitled to the support, for his house, of deft.'s soil. Deft. employed a contractor to pull down his house, excavate the foundations, & rebuild the house; the contractor took the risk of supporting pltf.'s house, as far as might be necessary, during the work, & to make good any damage & satisfy any claims arising therefrom. Pltf.'s house was injured in the progress of the work, owing to the means taken by the contractor to support it being insufficient:—Held: deft. was liable, even if the undertaking as to risk, etc., had amounted, which it did not, to an express stipulation that the contractor should do, as part of the works contracted for, all that was necessary to support pltf.'s house.

(2) The removal of soil, to the support of which an adjacent building or land may be entitled, is not in itself wrongful, & becomes so only when damage to the adjoining property results; whence it follows that if by artificial means of support the damage can be prevented, no cause of action arises (COCKBURN, C.J.).—*BOWER v. 1233. ———.]—A railway co. constructed a railway on the level across a highway in the district of which the relators were the urban sanitary authority. Subsequently depts. worked coal mines in a proper & usual manner beneath the highway, with a result that a gradual & uniform subsidence to the extent of about ten feet vertically took place in the highway, railway, & surrounding land. No actual damage was done to the highway thereby, nor was it rendered less convenient; but the railway co. placed ballast under the railway so as to maintain it at its original level, with the result that an embankment was formed obstructing the use of the highway. In an action against depts. for damages for the obstruction to the highway:—Held: (1) depts. were not liable; (2) assuming the highway to be repairable by the inhabitants at large, & therefore vested in the relators under Public Health Act, 1875 (c. 55), s. 149, the subsidence of the highway having been substantial,

t. Whether right to general passage of air—Sufficient for sanitary purposes—Passage of current of wind—Cannot be acquired by prescription.]—The owner of a house cannot by prescription claim to be entitled to the free & uninterrupted passage of a current of wind. He can claim no more air than what is sufficient for sanitary purposes.—BARROW v. ARCHER (1864), 2 Hyde, 125.—IND.

u. ——— Co-extensive with right to light—Interference must amount to nuisance to be actionable.]—The right of air is co-extensive with the right to light. To give a right of action, either prior or subsequently to Limitation Act, 1871, in a case, where there is no by the possibility of doing justice upon the existing record between all parties interested. Where the owner of the equity of redemption suing for damages for obstruction to light & air had granted a second mtge. with power to the mtgee. to collect the rents, & both mtgees., though declining to be joined in the action, had expressed their readiness to give all requisite discharges to effect.—Held: the mtgor. could maintain the action in his own name, but the damages recovered must be paid into ct., to await the execution by the mtgees. of a discharge of all claims by them against deft.—BENNETT v. HUGHES (1880), 2 L. R. 715, D. C.

Pltfs.' house was in a terrace fronting east. Deft.'s house adjoined it & was the most northerly house in the terrace. On the north was an open square. Along the back of the terrace was a space 8 feet wide, bounded on the west by a high wall, & divided into yards to the terrace houses. Opposite to pltfs.' house at the back was a urinal used by a great number of people, & the conveniences of the houses in the terrace were ventilated at the back. Deft. raised by sixteen feet a new building which formed the northern boundary of his yard. This erection to some extent darkened pltfs.' ancient lights & caused a stagnation of air in their yard, so that the exhalations from the urinal & conveniences were not carried off, & pltfs.' house became less healthy through want of ventilation. The judge considered that the interference with light was trifling & might be compensated by £10 damages, but that the interference with ventilation was serious; & granted an injunction against the continuance of the new building.—Held: as the exhalations had not arisen from any act of deft., the stagnation in pltfs.' yard caused by deft.'s new building was not actionable either as an interference with a legal right or as a nuisance, & the injunction must be discharged.

Although Prescription Act, 1832 (c. 71), does not apply to air, a right to have it come over another's land, in some definite direction to some particular place can be established by what is called immemorial user, or by user which may have had for its origin some lost grant or agreement binding on the owners of the servient tenement (LINDLEY, L.J.).

The law will not imply a grant except it is of something definite. The undefined passage of air is too vague (LOPES, L.J.).—CHASTEY v. ACKLAND, [1895] 2 Ch. 389; 64 L. J. Q. B. 523; 72 L. 1256. — May be acquired by prescription.—(1) A right to the access of air to a defined aperture over a servient tenement may be acquired though there is no defined channel over the servient tenement through which the air flows. (2) The grant of such a right may be implied from general words in a conveyance of a building from a grantor entitled in fee to the adjoining land though such land is subject to a lease.

On Jan. 19, 1905, the H. Co. conveyed to the pltf. in fee a piece of land with a stable on it. The stable was ventilated by apertures to which the air had access over an open yard which the co. owned in fee subject to a lease for a term of which 28 years were unexpired. On Aug. 3, 1905, the co. conveyed the yard to deft., the lessee joining to merge the term. Deft. put up a hoarding entirely closing the ventilators of the stable:—Held: on the principle of derogation from a grant, neither the co. nor deft. as their assignee could erect anything on the yard which prevented the use of the stable as a stable. A mandatory injunction granted to remove the hoarding.

(3) The rule that a man may not derogate from his grant is a rule of law & not a rule of equity at all. I do not think it depends upon an implication of a covenant on the part of the grantor (NEVILLE, J.).

1291. Whether twenty years' user necessary.—In case for a nuisance to ptff.'s occupation of his dwelling-house deft. pleaded that he had possessed his workshops for ten years before ptff. became possessed of his term in the dwelling-house, & had there carried on his trade without complaint from the occupiers of ptff.'s house:—Held: the plea should have shown a holding for twenty years.—*ELLIOTSON v. 1292. — Burden of proof.—A private hotel kept by ptff. adjoined a house, the ground floor of which had for twenty years been used as a livery stable without causing annoyance to him. In Feb. 1871, deft. became tenant of the latter premises, & made certain alterations in a stable which was separated from ptff.'s dining room by a party wall only, & had up to that time been chiefly used as a coach-house. In place of the wooden mangers therein, which ran at right angles to the said room, deft. put up iron mangers parallel with, & affixed to, the party wall; for halter ropes he substituted iron chains; he laid down a pavement of a more resonant substance than that forming the previous floor, & having rearranged the stalls as loose boxes, kept several horses in them. The consequence of these changes was that the movement of the horses created an intolerable noise & vibration, which disturbed the quiet of ptff.'s house, drove away his lodgers, & well nigh ruined him. In Jan. 1872, he filed a bill to restrain deft. from continuing the nuisance:—Held: no prescriptive right to use the stable so as to occasion annoyance had been acquired, & an actionable nuisance was committed causing serious injury to ptff., who was therefore entitled to an injunction, damages, & costs.—BALL v. RAY (1873), 8 Ch. App. 407; 28 L. T. 346; 37 J. P. 500; 21 W. R. 282, L. C. & L. J.J.; subsequent proceedings, 30 L. T. 1, L. C. & L. J.J.

SUB-SECT. 3.—SMOKE AND OFFENSIVE SMELLS.

Ptff. came to the house he occupies with all the rights which the common law affords, & one of them is, a right to wholesome air. Unless deft. shows a prescriptive right to carry on his business in the particular place, ptff. is entitled to judgment (TINDAL, C.J.).

The smells & noises of which ptff. complains are not hallowed by prescription, & under this plea deft. cannot justify their continuance (VAUGHAN, J.).

Semble: twenty years' user will legalise the nuisance.—BLISS v. HALL (1838), 4 Bing. N. C. 183; 6 Dowl. 442; 1 Arn. 19; 5 Scott, 500; 7 L. J. C. P. 122; 2 Jur. 110; 132 E. R. 758.

1296. ——Case for annoying ptff. in the enjoyment of his house, by causing offensive smells to arise near to, in, & about it. Plea, enjoyment as of right for twenty years of a mixen on deft.'s land contiguous & near to ptff.'s house, whereby, during all that time, offensive smells necessarily & unavoidably arose from the said mixen. On a traverse of the right, deft. had a verdict:—Held: the plea was bad, & ptff. entitled to judgment non obstante, for it did not show a right to cause offensive smells in ptff.'s premises, nor that any smells had, in fact, been used to pass beyond the limits of deft.'s own land.

There is no claim of an easement, unless you make it appear that the offensive smells had been used for twenty years to go over to ptff.'s land (LORD DENMAN, C.J.).—FLIGHT v. THOMAS (1839), 10 Ad. & El. 590; 7 Dowl. 741; 2 Per. & Dav. 531; 8 L. J. Q. B. 337; 3 Jur. 822; 113 E. R. 224.

1297. Smoke—Whether twenty years' user necessary.—To a declaration in case for an injury arising from smoke issuing out of deft.'s factory chimneys, deft. justified, under a prescriptive right to have the smoke issuing from the chimneys. This plea was traversed, & ptff. new assigned. It was proved that one of the chimneys whence the smoke issued had been erected for more than 20 years:—Held: upon the issue raised by the traverse to this plea, deft. was entitled to have the verdict entered for him.—BENNETT v. THOMPSON (1856), 6 E. & B. 683; 25 L. J. Q. B. 378; 27 L. T. O. S. 202; 2 Jur. N. S. 613, 670; 4 W. R. 594, 609, 614; 119 E. R. 1018.

1312. ———. Obstruction unlawfully erected.]—Pltf. was tenant of a house which overlooked the route of a procession. She proposed to let seats on a stand on the ground floor, & she in fact let a balcony & windows on the first floor to G. for the day of the procession for the purpose of viewing it. Defts., a metropolitan borough council, pursuant to resolution, unlawfully erected a stand in the highway which obstructed the view of the procession from the first & ground floors of pltf.'s house. Before the day of the procession arrived, G., seeing that the view from the first floor would be obstructed, asked pltf. to release him from his agreement, & pltf. did so. A number of persons interviewed pltf. as to hiring seats on the ground floor, but on seeing the preparation for the stand they refrained from doing so. Pltf. brought her action against defts. for the obstruction to & interference with the free use & enjoyment & occupation of her premises & the county ct. directed the jury that the erection of the stand was a public nuisance, & if pltf. had suffered special & individual loss therefrom she was entitled to recover damages from defts.:—Held: she was entitled to recover as damages the profit she had lost on G.'s contract, & that which, but for defts.' act, she would have made by letting seats on the ground floor. —CAMPBELL v. PADDINGTON CORPN., [1911] 1 K. B. 869; 80 L. J. K. B. 739; 104 L. T. 394; 75 J. P. 277; 27 T. L. R. 232; 9 L. G. R. 387, D. C.

circumstances. Pltf. & deft. were the respective owners & occupiers of two adjoining houses abutting on a street which was a public highway. The side wall of deft.'s house projected into the street a short distance beyond the front of pltf.'s house. There was no door or other opening in the side wall. Pltf. affixed boards at right angles to the front of his house & close to deft.'s side wall covering the wall to a height of 22 feet from the pavement. The boards did not constitute an obstruction to the street, but they prevented deft. from having access to the wall from the street for the purpose of repairing it, & from exhibiting advertisements upon it:—Held: the right of access to a highway enjoyed as a private right by the owner of premises adjoining the highway is not limited to the right to pass from the premises to the highway & vice versa, but includes the right of access to a wall of the premises in which there is no door or other opening, & the right to have advertisements on the wall displayed to the uninterrupted view of the members of the public using the highway: the act of pltf. was a wrongful interference with the private right of deft.; & deft. was entitled to an injunction restraining pltf. from maintaining the boards in the position above described.—*CORB v. The consideration was paid, & they were used for eleven years, but no grant was executed. C. purchased A.'s house without notice of the right; but there being fourteen chimney pots on the wall & only twelve flues in A.'s house:—Held: (1) C. was put on inquiry, he had constructive notice of the right, & was bound by it, & an injunction was granted to restrain him from stopping up the two chimneys; (2) it was not necessary that the bill should pray for a specific performance, & the absence of a grant was immaterial.—*HERVEY v. deft. occupied adjoining shops under leases from the same landlord, pltf. having the prior lease. Pltf. brought this action to restrain deft. from obstructing his view, & deft. served a third party notice upon the landlord, claiming, under a covenant for quiet enjoyment, to be protected against pltf.'s claim:—Held: deft. could not call upon his landlord to defend him against an unfounded claim; but if pltf.'s claim was well founded, it was by reason of an easement expressly or impliedly granted by his lease, & deft. took subject to such easements, & could not claim that the landlord covenanted with him for quiet enjoyment of that which did not pass under his lease; & therefore, whether pltf.'s claim was well or ill founded, the landlord was not a proper party to be

k. View of house—Whether easement can be acquired—Display of goods in shop.]—The owner of two adjoining shops leased one to pltf. & the other to deft. Pltf.'s shop window had been 1317 i. Use of chimney—In party wall. The owner of a house subdivided it, & let the north part to G. This consisted of two rooms, a front & back room, the former having a chimney, but not the latter. G. had a stove in the back room, & the only way he could use it was by passing a stovepipe through a hole in the partition between his & the south part, & thence into the chimney in that part. The owner subsequently leased the south part to deft., who at the time he became tenant was aware of the existence of the stovepipe. G. afterwards assigned to plff., & on leaving took down the pipe. Plff. on coming in, put up a pipe of his own, with the consent of, or at least without any objection by, deft. Deft. having afterwards taken down the pipe & stopped up the hole :—Held: he was a wrongdoer, for he only held the south part subject to the user or easement of plff. of the stovepipe & hole.—CULVERWELL v. LOCKINGTON (1875), 24 C. P. 611.—CAN.

o. Water-race on goldfields.—The rights of a grantee of a water-race on the goldfields are analogous to easements, & the extinguishment of such rights in whole or in part are determined on the same principles as apply to the extinguishment of easements.—*CHIN FAN v. p. To play golf—St. Andrew's Links.—DENPARKER v. CLEGHORN (1813), 2 Dow. 40; 3 E. R. 780.—SCOT.

q. Curb stone to protect wall.—A party had enjoyed for upwards of twenty years possession of a curb stone placed against the wall of her property, in a court or vennel belonging to an adjoining proprietor to protect the wall from carts, etc.; this stone having been removed at his own hand by the adjoining proprietor, the party set up a row of stones along the wall, cemented with lime, in the line of the original curb stone :—Held: as this operation had been occasioned by the act of the proprietor removing the curb stone, & as the row of stones was in the line of the original stone, & was no practical encroachment on the vennel, the party was entitled to have the adjoining proprietor & all others interdicted from removing them.—BLACK v. DRYBROUGH (1840), 2 Duml. (Ct. of Sess.) 583.—SCOT.

r. Obstructing public passage.—Where the proprietors of a tenement fronting a public street had been for upwards of forty years in the practice of loading goods in a passage forming a common access from the street to several back tenements, & thereby obstructing the passage :—Held: they had acquired no right to do so, & interdict granted against their interfering with the free & reasonable use of the passage by the proprietor of the back tenement.—*STAVART, PATT & CO. v. To this plea pltf. replied de injuriâ.—Held: the replication was good, as the plea consisted merely of excuse; it neither claimed any interest in pltf.'s land, nor set up such a right by virtue of an authority from pltf. within the true meaning of the rule which precludes the adoption of this general form of replication.*

Here the plea only shows a lawful excuse given by law to deft. for entering pltf.'s land & pulling down the stable there, because it was a nuisance & obstruction to the right he has to enjoy his own land without inconvenience (ALDERSON, B.).—THOMPSON v. EASTWOOD (1852), 8 Exch. 69; 19 L. T. O. S. 313.

1331. Extent of remedy—Excessive user—Only excess can be removed.—Pltf., who had a right to irrigate his meadow by placing a dam of loose stones across a small stream, & occasionally a board or fender, fastened the board by means of two stakes, which had never been done by his predecessors. Deft., who had rights on the same stream, removed the stakes & the board also:—Held: deft. had no right to remove the board as well as the stakes, on the ground that the stakes gave the board a character of permanency incompatible with her own rights.

If a party who had a right to a stone weir were to erect buttresses, one who should oppose the erection of the buttresses could not justify demolishing the weir as well as the buttresses (TINDAL, C.J.).—GREENSLADE v. HALLIDAY (1830), 6 Bing. 379; 4 Moo. & P. 71; 8 L. J. O. S. C. P. 124; 130 E. R. 1326.

1333. ————]—Reasonable manner.—Pltf., having a prescriptive right to a flow of water, led by means of a gutter laid in a mill-stream at a point where an ancient weir was erected, lengthened the gutter for the purpose of irrigating more land. The flow of water down deft.'s mill-stream was diminished, & deft. in consequence pulled down the ancient weir, which prevented the water from flowing down pltf.'s gutter:—Held: no suspension reserving a right of way on its south side, the description of which agreed with the right of way devised to T. C. G. sold by the same description, & with same reservation, to M. who, in turn, sold to the municipality of the county of C. B.:—Held: the building of a fence across the way by pltf. constituted an obstruction which defts. were justified in removing.—McLENNAN v. HUTCHINGS (1917), 50 N. S. R. 359.—CAN.

PART XII. SECT. 2, SUB-SECT. 2.—A.
s. When cause of action arises—

Limit of time.—When a right of free access for light & air is obstructed by the erection of a permanent structure a cause of action accrues to the person whose easement is destroyed at the time the structure is complete, & therefore 21 J. 1. c. 16, sect. 3, bars the right to recover damages for the injury in an action brought more than six years from the date of completion of the structure.—GREEN v. WALKLEY (1901), 27 V. L. R. 503.—AUS.

t. Onus of proof of easement on plaintiff.—In an action for obstructing of pltf.'s right to the enjoyment of the flow of water as it had formerly existed was caused by his having become a wrongdoer, & deft. was not justified in stopping pltf.'s excessive user by means which altogether prevented his enjoyment of the water, but only in stopping it by the least injurious means in his power. Semble: if there had been a confusion of rights, deft. would have been justified in abating the nuisance.—HILL v. COCK (1872), 26 L. T. 185; 36 J. P. 552.

1334. ————]—Interference with sewer.—Where an urban sanitary authority constructed a sewer under the bed of a goit, on which deft. had a mill & a mill-pond to which water was supplied by the goit, without giving notice to deft. as required by Public Health Act, 1875 (c. 55), s. 32, & deft. forcibly dug down to, broke, & plugged the sewer:—Held: (1) the interest of deft. was an easement, & so came within the definition of "lands" in sect. 4 of the Act, even if deft. was not the actual owner, & pltfs., therefore, had no authority to carry a sewer under the goit; but (2) deft. having cut the sewer, & thereby caused great inconvenience & risk of disease to the public, there would be no costs in the action; (3) deft. was within his rights in counter-claiming for damages, as pltfs., by resisting his title had given him no opportunity of agreeing upon damages.—CLECKHEATON URBAN DISTRICT COUNCIL v. FIRTH (1898), 62 J. P. 536; 42 Sol. Jo. 669.

1335. Whether remedy barred—By refusal to grant mandatory injunction.—A building society had established against defts. a right of way over part of the property in the receiver's hands, but so much of their claim as asked for the removal of a house which obstructed the way was dismissed without costs, & no damages were given. The society applied for leave, notwithstanding the receivership, to proceed under their common law rights to abate the obstruction:—Held: though the society had failed to obtain a mandatory injunction, it did not follow that they had lost their right to abatement, or that other means were not still open to them of asserting their rights of way.—LANE v. CAPSEY, [1891] 3 Ch. 411; 61 L. J. Ch. 55; 65 L. T. 375; 40 W. R. 87.

1342. — Under notice to quit.]—A tenant from year to year filed a bill against adjoining tenants holding under the same landlord to restrain the erection of new buildings interfering with the free access of light & air to the premises occupied by him. The landlord thereupon gave the tenant notice to quit, & at the time of the hearing, only eight months of the tenancy were unexpired:—Held: though the extent of pltf.'s interest did not necessarily disentitle him to relief, yet it was a material ingredient for consideration; & as it was not clear that pltf. had sustained material injury, & as the inconvenience to defts. of compelling them to pull down their buildings would be far greater than any which pltf. could endure if the buildings were allowed to stand & he were left to bring an action for damages, the bill ought to be dismissed without costs, without prejudice to any action pltf. might be advised to bring.—JACOMB v. KNIGHT (1863), 3 De G. J. & Sm. 533; 2 New Rep. 295; 32 L. J. Ch. 601; 27 J. P. 547; 8 L. T. 621; 11 W. R. 812; 46 E. R. 743, L. J. 1343.

1343. — Insignificant interest.]—A local authority, for the purpose of repairing the surface of a highway, cut away part of a bank at the side of a road, the bank representing the accumulated road scrapings of many previous years. The yearly tenant of an adjoining small cottage & garden brought an action against the local authority, alleging that the wall of his garden had been rendered unsafe through the partial removal of the bank:—Held: (1) the bank was within the boundaries of the original highway, & the cutting away of a portion of it had not materially affected the support to pltf.'s wall; (2) as pltf. had no substantial interest in his holding, & had suffered no damage which could not easily be rectified, his action was a piece of useless litigation & an abuse of process, & must be dismissed with costs under Public Authorities Protection Act, 1893 (c. 61).—WEBSTER v. BAKEWELL RURAL COUNCIL (1916), 86 L. J. Ch. 89; 115 L. T. 678; 80 J. P. 437; 14 L. G. R. 1109.

mencement of the term & before entry by pltf., defts. by excavations on their property deprived the theatre of the support of the adjacent lands, so that the theatre was rendered unsafe & was closed during the eight weeks by order of the proper local authorities. Pltf. sued defts. in respect of the damage suffered by him in consequence of their acts:—Held: defts. had injured a proprietary right of pltf. who was, therefore, entitled to maintain the action.—*GILLARD v. It matters not that the cottage was divided into two parts, one of which only was in the occupation of such servant, the other being occupied by a tenant paying rent.—*BERTIE v. 1347. Married woman entitled to separate use.]—Where defts. contemplated erecting premises which would if completed, it was alleged, interfere with the ancient lights of two messuages, one of which belonged to a husband & the other to his wife, separate actions were brought by husband & wife claiming, inter alia, an injunction & damages. The title of the wife did not appear. On a motion for an injunction defts. admitted the right of pltfs., & had previously offered to amend their plans accordingly. They objected, however, to paying two sets of costs:—Held: if it should turn out that the wife was not entitled to her separate use, the taxing master should disallow any extra costs occasioned by bringing two actions instead of one.—HEIMBS v. NEWCASTLE CO-OPERATIVE SOCIETY (1897), 76 L. T. 109.

1348. Executor of deceased plaintiff—Obstruction of light.]—The sole pltf. in an action for a mandatory injunction & damages for obstruction to the access of light to a freehold house, having died more than six months after the issue of the writ, B., the exor. & devisee, obtained the common order to carry on proceedings. On motion to discharge this order for irregularity, on the ground that the cause of action did not continue, & that there was no transmission of interest to B.:—Held: though any action by B., as exor., for injury to pltf.'s real estate might, under Civil Procedure Act, 1833 (c. 42), s. 2, be limited to the six months prior to pltf.'s death, still he could recover damages to this extent: that, with regard to the peculiar equitable remedy to have the obstruction to light removed, this was an equitable right subsisting in pltf. at the time of her death, which, with the equitable remedy by mandatory injunction, devolved to B. as her devisee, & consequently proceedings could properly be carried on by B.—*JONES v. (b) Reversioners.

1349. General rule.—(1) A Ct. of Equity interferes by injunction to prevent an injury in respect of a legal right, simply on the ground of the damage it produces to property; & the jurisdiction of the ct. is not confined to restraining injury to the enjoyment & comfort in the occupation: therefore it is not necessary that a pltf. filing a bill for an injunction to restrain such an injury should be in the actual occupation of the property.

(2) Where a pltf. filed a bill for an injunction to restrain the erection of an addition to the house adjoining one of his own, so as to interfere with the windows, which he alleged were ancient lights, some of which had been recently enlarged, & some new lights had been opened, & an interim order had been granted; upon a motion for an injunction the ct. gave pltf. liberty to bring an action at law, but allowed deft. to proceed with the new building to a specified height, on his undertaking to abide by any order the ct. might make as to pulling down any addition which might be made to the erection complained of by the bill, & also undertaking to admit at the trial that the erection had been carried to such specified height.—WILSON v. TOWNEND (1860), 1 Drew. & Sm. 324; 30 L. J. Ch. 25; 3 L. T. 352; 25 J. P. 116; 6 Jur. N. S. 1100; 9 W. R. 30; 62 E. R. 403.

1350. For injury done to reversion—By lessee—Light.—An action will lie for the owner of the inheritance in a house for stopping up windows.

We are of opinion that pltf. may at present maintain an action for the injury to his inheritance by obstructing the ingress of light & air into the house & this action does as well lie against pltf.'s own lessee as against any other person (per Cur.).—*THOMLINSON v. 1352. ——— Support.—(1) Pltf., in 1822, had a remainder in fee in a wharf expectant on a tenancy for life of his father. Defts., in that year, dug soil out of their dock which was contiguous, & the water thereby undermined the wall of the wharf. In 1823, pltf.'s father died, & in 1824, the action of the water on the wall had undermined it so far that it fell.—Held: pltf. had a right of action against defts., although they had done no act since the death of pltf.'s father, by which pltf. came into possession of the freehold of the wharf.

(2) By a private Act of Parliament, it was enacted, that defts. should be sued within "six calendar months after the act committed":—Held: the limitation ran from the time of the consequential injury happening, & not from the doing of the act which caused that consequential injury; as, here, the act itself was not tortious or injurious, except from those consequences which occurred some time after.—*GILLON v. 1354. ———.—The second count of a declaration stated that a messuage & land, the reversion whereof belonged to pltf., were in fact supported by the land adjoining; yet deft. wrongfully & negligently dug & made divers excavations in the land adjoining without sufficiently shoring the messuage & land, & thereby deprived them of their support, whereby they sank & were injured. The third count stated that pltf., by reason of her interest in the messuage & land, was entitled to have the messuage supported laterally by certain land adjoining; yet deft. wrongfully & negligently dug & made divers excavations in the land adjoining without sufficiently shoring the said messuage & land, & thereby deprived the messuage of the support to which pltf. was so entitled, whereby the messuage & land sank & were injured:—Held: (1) the second count was good, although it did not allege any right to support, for as it did not appear that deft. was the owner of the adjoining land, he must be taken to be a stranger & a wrong-doer; (2) the third count was also good.—*BIBBY v. 1356. ———.—Chancery Amendment Act, 1857 (c. 27), in conferring upon ets. of equity a jurisdiction to award damages instead of an injunction, has not altered the settled principles upon which those ets. interfered by way of injunction; & in cases of continuing actionable nuisance the jurisdiction so conferred ought only to be exercised under very exceptional circumstances.

An electric lighting co. erected powerful engines & other works on land near a house which was subject to a lease. Owing to excavations for the foundations of the engines, & to vibration & noise from the working of them, structural injury was caused to the house, & annoyance & discomfort to the lessee. The lessee & the reversioners brought separate actions against the co. for an injunction & damages in respect of the nuisance & injury thus occasioned:—Held: (KEKEWICH, J.) (1) both the lessee & the reversioners were entitled to relief, but, under the circumstances, by way of damages & not of injunction.

(2) Ptf's. in both actions appealed against the refusal of the injunction:—Held: there was nothing in either case to justify the ct. in refusing to aid, by injunction, the legal rights which had been established.

It may be stated as a good working rule that damages may be given in substitution for an injunction in cases where there are found in combination the four following requirements, viz. where the injury to the pltf.'s legal rights is (a) small, (b) capable of being estimated in money, (c) can be adequately compensated by a small money payment, & (d) where the case is one in which it would be oppressive to deft. to grant an injunction (*A. 1358. ——— Of permanent character—Light.]—
 The custom of London, which allows a man to build to any height upon ancient foundations, although he may darken his neighbour's lights thereby, must be confined to cases where all the four walls of the building belong to the party, & will not justify him in raising an obstruction by means of three walls of his, so as to darken the lights in a fourth wall belonging to his neighbour.

This is a case in which the reversioner may maintain an action, because it is an injury to the right that he complains of; & the effect of letting the obstruction stand might be, that, from the death of witnesses, evidence of its erection might be lost, & so the injury would become permanent (TENTERDEN, L.J.).—SHADWELL v. HUTCHINSON (1820), 3 C. & P. 615; Mood. & M. 350; subsequent proceedings (1830), 4 C. & P. 334; (1831), 2 B. & Ad. 97.

1364. ——— ——— Noise.]—In order to entitle a reversioner to maintain an action for an injury to his reversion, it is necessary that the wrong complained of should be in its nature permanent. Therefore:—Held: a reversioner could not maintain an action against a railway co. for making loud hammering noises in a shed adjoining his house, by reason whereof the tenant quitted, though it appeared that he was afterwards unable to let the house except at a lower rate.

There is a distinction between a nuisance & an easement. No right can be gained by continuing a public nuisance (POLLOCK, C.B.).—

 Mandatory injunction refused, & nominal damages, without costs on either side, granted in a case where pltf. had only a life interest, subject to an existing lease, & where, though there was a substantial interference with present comfort in respect of light, there was no prospective injury or diminution in the saleable value of the property. There being no case as to air, pltf.'s case as to light was made less strong by its being addressed conjointly to air & light. 1377. Owner of partly worked mines—Loss of support due to previously worked minerals.—(1) A lessee of underground strata is not liable in damages to the owner of buildings on the surface, who has acquired a right to have the buildings uninjured by underground workings, for injury occasioned to the buildings by reason of subsidence happening during the currency of the lease, caused, not by any act of commission on the part of the lessee, but resulting from an excavation made in the underground strata by the lessee's predecessor in title prior to the date of the lease. Where ptfs.' buildings, erected more than twenty years before action, on land, the mines under which were worked by defts. under a lease, were injured, during the currency of the lease, & within six years before action, by subsidence caused, not by the acts of defts., but by the acts of their predecessor in title, done prior to the date of the lease:—Held: defts. were not liable.

(2) Although the right of the owner of the surface & the right of the owner of the buildings on the surface not to have the land or buildings interfered with by underground workings on the part of the owner of the minerals stand upon different footings as to the modes of acquiring them, yet the right as regards buildings when once acquired is in character the same as the right of the

Defts. then caused the wall of the new building, which intercepted the light, to be faced with white tiles, which they alleged so improved the light coming to ptff.'s windows as to abate the nuisance:—Held: an actionable obstruction of ancient light cannot be justified by the substitution of light

1396. Whether damages granted in lieu of injunction.]—In an action for an injunction to restrain deft. from further building so as to interfere with pltf.'s ancient lights, & for a mandatory injunction to compel him to pull down like buildings already constructed, pltf. proved that if deft.'s building was completed it would seriously interfere with his light; but he failed to prove that the commercial value of his premises, or the facility of letting them, would be materially affected. The premises of pltf. & deft. were both leaseholds held under the same lessor, who had consented to the erection of deft.'s building, & it was held that under the special circumstances the ct. was justified in giving damages both for the completed & the threatened interference, instead of an injunction. On appeal:—Held: pltf., having proved his legal right to the light, & that the proposed building would infringe that right, & there being no special circumstances disentitling him to relief, he was entitled to an injunction as to the threatened building & to damages only as to the completed buildings.

The ct. has affirmed over & over again that the jurisdiction to give damages, when it exists, is not so to be used as in fact to enable deft. to purchase from pltf. against his will, his legal right to the easement (BUCKLEY, J.).

1400. Undertaking by defendant to prevent damage—Liberty reserved to plaintiff to apply.—Pltf. was entitled to a supply of water for the purposes of his mill, by means of a watercourse or aqueduct, passing through the adjoining lands, which belonged to deft. In consequence of the working by the latter of a mine under the watercourse the level of the bed thereof was depressed to the extent of four feet for some distance. To prevent the water from overflowing the banks, deft. had erected a stone wall & embankment. No actual diminution in the supply of water to pltf.'s mill was proved in the cause:—Held: in an injunction suit, pltf. was entitled in consequence of the subsidence which had already taken place in the level of the bed of the watercourse to obtain the interference of the ct. in order to force deft. so to work his mines for the future that no loss of water should accrue to pltf., but as deft. had taken steps to prevent any such loss from happening, the ct. gave him the opportunity of entering into an undertaking instead of making a hostile decree for an injunction against him—reserving liberty for pltf. to apply if there should be occasion.—ELWELL v. It appeared to be a question of some nicety whether the lights were ancient lights. On the motion coming on, the judge restrained deft. from further building, & from permitting the wall which he had erected to remain:—Held: this order was right, as deft. had endeavoured to anticipate the action of the ct. by hurrying on his building, & what he had erected ought therefore to be at once pulled down, without regard to the ultimate result of the action.—*DANIEL v. But having that jurisdiction, it will direct an inquiry to assess damages, & will not leave pltf. to his remedy by action.

Although a month should elapse between the completion of the building & any objection thereto, the ct. will not consider that there was laches or acquiescence on the part of the owner of the adjoining property when he was not himself in possession or occupation of it.—GORT (VISCOUNTESS) v. The owner of B., in the lifetime of a tenant for life of A., & with her approval, pulled down B., & built a new house in such a manner as to encroach upon the gullet, & to exclude the light & air from the pantry of A. After the death of the tenant for life of A., the reversioners filed a bill against the owner of B. for a mandatory injunction, or alternatively for damages for the obstruction of light & air:—Held: under the circumstances, the inconvenience was not sufficiently serious to entitle pltf. to relief, either by mandatory injunction, or by an inquiry to assess damages.—*SPARLING v. the piece of land at the rear, would form a building site suitable for a warehouse or factory; & that the value of this building site as a whole would be diminished by the obstruction to light in the front:—Held: the damages recoverable by pltf. were not limited to the depreciation in the value of the houses, but extended to the diminution in value of the whole of pltf.'s premises considered as one building site.—*GRIFFITH v. Annotation:—Apld. Wills v. May, [1923] 1 Ch. 317.

1472. — Site ready for development—Site acquired for future development.—Pltf. was the owner of a small two-storied house, No. 117, whose windows on the north side were ancient lights; she was also the owner of No. 119, a house similar to & adjoining No. 117 on the south. Deft., who owned No. 115, to the north of & adjoining No. 117, converted it into a shop with offices above it, & so obstructed the access of light to the ancient windows of No. 117. In an action for damages caused by that obstruction, it appeared that the site of No. 117 lent itself to development by the erection of a shop; that the character of the district was in process of changing from a residential to a commercial one; that pltf. bought Nos. 117 & 119 as an investment with a view to developing their sites as a building site for commercial purposes; that the sites could together be formed into a single site suitable for such purposes, though the development thereof might be delayed for a few years owing to the existence of a lease affecting No. 119. It further appeared that the obstruction of light on the north side of No. 117 had rendered the sites of pltf.'s houses less valuable as a building site for commercial purposes:—Held: in the circumstances, the ct. was entitled, in estimating the damages caused to pltf. by the obstruction, to take into consideration not only the immediate damage done to the house standing on the site of No. 117, but also the damage to the combined sites of Nos. 117 & 119 treated as a building site adaptable to commercial purposes, notwithstanding that the site of No. 119 might not be immediately ripe for development.—*WILLS v. Liberty to defendant to apply—For sanction of scheme of building.—The ct., though it grant a perpetual injunction to restrain the darkening of ancient lights, will yet, in a proper case, retain the power of sanctioning any proper scheme which may be proposed by deft., & will for this purpose give liberty to apply to the judge in chambers with reference to any such scheme; & will not require the payment of costs as a condition precedent to such application.—*STOKES v. Sec. generally, INJUNCTION.

1478. Discretion of court to grant inquiry.—Where pltf., undertaking to abide by any order as to damages, had obtained an interlocutory injunction to restrain defts. from proceeding with certain erections, but his bill was dismissed at the hearing, the ct. refused an application by defts. at the dismissal of the bill, for an inquiry as to damages sustained by them by reason of their having been restrained by the injunction for the space of a year, but without prejudice to any applications they might make as to damages on pltf.'s undertaking, upon the production of sufficient evidence to justify an inquiry.—BUTT v. IMPERIAL GAS CO. (1866), 14 L. T. 349; 14 W. R. 508; affd., 2 Ch. App. 158, L. C.

1479. ——(1) An injunction to restrain deft. from building so as to prevent access of light & air to pltf.'s windows was granted ex p. on Nov. 4, 1879, & on Nov. 27, was continued until the trial or further order, pltf. giving the usual undertaking as to damages. On Feb. 18, 1880, the Ct. of Appeal discharged the order. On Nov. 11, 1880, a perpetual injunction as to access of air was granted; but on June 21, 1881, the Ct. of Appeal dismissed the action with costs. On Feb. 16, 1882, deft. gave notice of motion for an inquiry as to damages which was refused. The only damage alleged was that deft. had agreed to let part of the property with the new buildings to a tenant, & was prevented from carrying this out by the injunction preventing his building. It was not proved, however, that there was any binding agreement to take a lease, nor did it appear that the injunction interfered with the erection of the buildings to such an extent as would have entitled the intended tenant to throw up the agreement if binding:—Held: an inquiry as to damages ought not to be granted. (2) Qu.: whether where an interlocutory injunction has been wrongly granted, owing to a mistake of law by the judge, without any misrepresentation, suppression, or other default on the part of pltf., an inquiry as to damages can be directed under the undertaking. (3) The ct. is not bound to grant an inquiry as to damages whenever deft. has sustained some damage by the granting the injunction; but it has a discretion, & may refuse any inquiry if the damage restrained is trivial or remote, or if there has been great delay in making the application. The question considered at what time the application for an inquiry as to damages ought to be made:—Held: (4) even if there had been a binding agreement by the proposed tenant to take a lease, & the injunction had so interfered with the building as to entitle the tenant to be

[The deed's] words import a grant of such parts thereof only as should upon the licence & power given to search & get, be found within the described limits, which is nothing more than the grant of a licence to search & get, irrevocable, indeed, on account of its carrying an interest; with a grant of such of the ore only as should be found & got, the grantor parting with no estate or interest in the rest (ABBOTT, C.J.).—DOE d. 1503. ——— Grant prior to Statute Quia Emptores.]—(1) Where, in a manor, there are many lands & tenements, the tenants whereof, in respect of those lands, have always exercised rights of common on the waste, the declarations of deceased persons, who had been such tenants, & exercised such rights, are inadmissible in an action of trespass upon a question whether the locus in quo is parcel of the waste, such rights not being of a sufficiently public nature to justify the reception of hearsay evidence. Secus: if all the inhabitants, or all the tenants, of the manor, or of a particular district of it, had been interested.

(2) But the public nature of such rights does not depend upon the number of them.

If this question had been one in which all the inhabitants of the manor, or all the tenants of it, or a particular district of it, had been interested, reputation from any deceased inhabitant or tenant, or even deceased residents in the manor, would have been admissible, such residents having presumably a knowledge of such local customs; & if there had been a common law right for every tenant of the manor to have common on the wastes of a manor, reputation from any deceased tenant as to the extent of those wastes, & therefore as to any particular land being waste of the manor, would have been admissible. But although there are some books which state that common appendant is of common right, & that common appendant is the "common law right" of every free tenant on the lord's wastes, it is not to be understood that every tenant of a manor has by common law such a right, but only that certain tenants have such a right, not by prescription, but as a right by common law, incident to the grant. This right is not a common right of all tenants, but belongs only to each grantee, before the Statute Quia Emptores, of arable land, by virtue of his individual grant, & as an incident thereto; & it is as much a peculiar right of the grantee as one derived by express grant, or by prescription, though it differs in its extent, being limited to such cattle as are kept for ploughing & manuring the arable land granted, & as are of a description fit for that purpose; whereas the right by grant or prescription has no such limits, & depends on the will of the grantor (PARKE, B.). —DUNRAVEN (LORD) v. At the date of the conveyance of an upland farm in North Wales there was appertaining to the farm & exercised & enjoyed therewith & reputed & known as appurtenant thereto a sheep-walk, or right of depasturing sheep, on an adjoining mountain:—Held: this right passed with the farm, notwithstanding that it was a profit à prendre in alieno solo.—WHITE v. There was therefore no title in deft. by the grant of the manor, & there was no evidence supporting his claim by prescription to the presumption of a lost grant.—HODGSON v. MCCREATH (1923), 93 L. J. 1516. -----] C. demised to deft., for a term of years, the exclusive right & licence to shoot, kill, & take game upon certain of his lands, together with the use of a cottage for the occupation of a keeper. There was also a covenant by deft. that he would leave the estate as well stocked with game in all respects, as the same was at the time of the commencement of the term. Deft. entered upon the occupation & occupied for the term, during which C. assigned his revision to pltf. Pltf. having brought an action against deft. in respect of a breach of the above covenant to leave the estate well stocked with game:—Held: the demise was a demise of an incorporeal hereditament; the covenant was one which would pass to the assignee of the reversion & the action would lie at the suit of the pltf.—*HOOPER v. (3) A profit à prendre is a right to take something off another person’s land. Such a right does not prevent the owner from taking the same sort of thing from off his own land; the first right may limit, but does not exclude, the second (LINDLEY, L.J.).—SUTHERLAND (DUKE) v. HEATHCOTE, [1892] 1 Ch. 475; 61 L. J. Ch. 248; 66 L. T. 210; 8 T. L. R. 272; 36 Sol. Jo. 231, C. A. Annotation:—As to (3) Refd. Fitzhardinge v. Purcell, [1908] 2 Ch. 139.

The demise contained also a proviso that it should be lawful for A. during the continuance of the demise, to commence & prosecute any action, information, etc., in the name of C. against all persons trespassing on the demised premises for the purpose, or by means of hunting, coursing, shooting, or sporting thereon, A. paying the expenses of such prosecutions, etc., & indemnifying C.:—Held: the exception in the demise did not operate as a grant from C. to A. of “the sole & exclusive right to pursue, kill, & take birds of warren upon the demised premises, with free liberty for A. & his servants to enter the demised premises, & therein to pursue, kill & take the birds of warren upon the same, at any time, at his free will & pleasure.”

(2) In the case under consideration the words “except & always reserved, all royalties, etc.,” may have their proper effect of creating an exception; & the reason for holding their legal effect to be that of a grant by the grantee of the estate fails (COLLINS, J.).—PANNELL v. Subsequently an order in council was passed cancelling such reservation & declaring that all persons who had received homestead entries for lands similarly granted should be entitled to the timber on their homesteads free of dues:—Held: the reserve mentioned in the Crown grant was merely a license to enter & cut the timber, & was not a reservation.—MACCUMMON v. the right. Where deft. justified under a right of common of pasture, by showing a demise from a freehold for life of the land in respect of which he claimed, & averred that he, deft., & all those whose estate he then had, & his landlord, from time, etc., had common of pasture in respect of the demised premises:—Held: the plea was bad.—*A.-G. v. 1527. Must be connected with dominant tenement.—A.-G. v. MATHIAS, No. 1500, post.

1528. ———.]—A claim of a prescriptive right in the owners or occupiers of close A. to enter close B., belonging to a third person, & to cut down & carry away & convert to their own use all the trees & wood growing & being thereon, "as to close A. appertaining" is void, as being too large.

This is a profit à prendre, in which a man may have an inheritable estate; it is in no way connected with the enjoyment of the dominant tenement. There is really no more connection here, than if the owner of an estate in Northumberland were to grant a right of way to the owner of another estate in Kent; because, as has been stated, an incident of this nature cannot, even by express words in an existing deed, be connected with the estate by the mere act of the parties. It must, in addition to that, have some natural connection with the estate, as being for its benefit, or, as has been expressed, it must inhere in the estate. Therefore, if an express grant to this effect had been produced between the grantee & grantor, & going as between the heirs of the grantee & grantor, it cannot run with the estate (BYLES, J.).—*BAILEY v. 1541. — Sufficiency of evidence.—Not impaired by user by unauthorised persons.—This was an action of trespass, brought to try a right of common claimed by deft. over a piece of land called C., in the parish of E., as appurtenant to a farm held by him. From the evidence, it appeared that deft. & his predecessors in estate had, for thirty years previously, pastured their cattle on the land: but it was shown on behalf of pltf. that all the inhabitants of the parish of E. had been in the habit of turning animals of various kinds on to the land, whether they were possessed of any land to which right of common could be attached or not; that the land had been leased, as part of the manor of S., since the reign of Hen. VIII., & no mention appeared in any of the leases or other documents of any rights of common prior to 1795; that in that year an Act was passed authorising an extension of the G. canal, by which it was provided that when any part of a common was taken by the co., they should pay compensation for the common rights, to the churchwardens of the parish in which the common was situated. It was also proved that a considerable compensation had been paid about the year 1805, under this section, to the churchwardens of the parish of E., in respect of a part of the locus in quo which had been taken by the co., & which was then lying waste, & that subsequently to that time the parish had demanded and received compensation in respect of common rights from railway cos. for other parts of the common:—Held: the exercise of rights of common by other persons who could not have had such rights would not have prevented the thirty years' user by deft. from being sufficient evidence of his right by prescription at common law; but pltf. having shown that the user originated in consequence of the passing of the G. Canal Act, the presumption arising from the subsequent user was rebutted.—CHURCH v. TAME (1867), L. R. 2 C. P. 480, n.

1542. — Open continuous user.—The appts. claimed under above Act, but it had been decided so long ago as 1865, that the Act did not apply to easements or profits à prendre in gross, & there was nothing to show that this right was appurtenant. It was merely a right in gross. Was there any right by prescription at common law? One must look at all the circumstances of the case, bearing in mind that no claim could be made if it were shown how the acts of user originated. In his opinion the user arose from a mistake in the construction of the deed of 1792. It was said that a lost grant ought to be presumed, but that was expressly excluded by a statute of Elizabeth relating to Caius College as regards all grants after that time, & if there had been any such grant it would have been mentioned in some way or other in the earlier title (COTTON, L.J.).—WARWICK v. GONVILLE & CAIUS COLLEGE (1890), 6 T. L. R. 447, C. A.

1545. Under Prescription Act, 1832 (c. 71).—Period of enjoyment.—Interruption of.—Life estate.

(1) Under above Act, where a deft. justified in trespass under a profit à prendre, as enjoyed 30 years "next before the commencement of the suit," a life estate, which had existed during part of that time, was to be excluded from the computation. Therefore, where pltf. replied to such a plea, that a life estate existed during part of the 30 years, which allegation was traversed by deft.:—Held: on this issue deft. was entitled to succeed, it appearing that the life estate existed during part of the 30 years, but that deft. enjoyed the right claimed for 25 years before its commencement, & 5 years after its termination.

(2) A plea of enjoyment of a profit à prendre for 60 years, is defeated by showing unity of possession during part of the time; & unity of title is prima facie evidence of unity of possession.—CLAYTON v. CORBY (1842), 2 Q. B. 813; 2 Gal. & Dav. 174; 11 L. J. Q. B. 239; 114 E. R. 310; subsequent proceedings (1843), 5 Q. B. 415.

Replication, taking issue thereon:—Held: this plea was bad, as setting up an indefinite claim to take clay from & out of the close of pltf.—CLAYTON v. CORBY (1843), 5 Q. B. 415; Dav. & Mer. 440; 14 L. J. Q. B. 364; 8 Jur. 212; 114 E. R. 1306; sub nom. DOE d. CLAYTON v. CORBY, 2 L. T. O. S. 207.

(b) Admissibility of Evidence.

1548. Reputation.]—Qu.: whether general evidence of reputation as to a prescriptive right of digging stones on the lord's waste, annexed to a particular estate, be admissible. Two judges against two. But one of those who held the affirmative thought it required other evidence of right to be first laid as a foundation. Semble: such evidence may be given as to a particular custom, though not as to a private prescription.—MOREWOOD v. WOOD (1791), 14 East, 327; 104 E. R. 626.

*Annotations:—Refd. R. v. Antrobus (1835), 2 Ad. & El. 788. Mentd. Doe d. Mudd v. Suckmore (1836), 5 Ad. & El. 703.

1549. —.—(1) In an action by the lord of a manor against a copyholder, for trespassing on the free warren of pltf., a judgment on a quo warranto against a former owner of the manor, in which the A.-G. confessed a prescriptive title to the franchise of free warren, as appurtenant to the manor, is evidence for pltf. in support of a prescriptive right of a free warren.

(2) Where the information charged an usurpation of the franchise over the lands of tenants as well as demesne lands, & the ct. gave judgment for deft. as to both:—Held: the record was evidence of a prescriptive right over both, although the plea set forth a title over demesne lands only, & the A.-G. confessed the title as pleaded.

(3) Reputation is admissible evidence of a claim of free warren, by prescription, over an entire manor. Therefore, a private Act for the inclosure of common lands within the manor, in which the interest of copyholders appeared by the recital, & which contained a proviso expressly saving the rights of the lord to free warren in the manor, in as ample a manner as the lord as theretofore enjoyed it, is admissible evidence to prove the right as against a copyholder.

(4) On the same ground, the declarations of deceased copyholders as to the existence of the franchise over all the copyholders, is admissible for the like purpose.

(5) A judgment in a former action against another copyholder, for a trespass on pltf.'s free warren, is also admissible.

(6) A bishop who had free warren, by prescription over the demesne & tenemental lands of a manor whereof he was seized jure ecclesie, accepted a grant from the Crown, to himself & his successors, of free warren over the demesne lands of all his manors in England:—Held: if the grant could have the effect of extinguishing the prescription as to the demesne lands, it could not effect it over the other lands of the manor. Qu.: whether a franchise by the Crown within time of memory determines a prescriptive claim to the same franchise.—CARNARVON (EARL) v. 1550. Manorial documents—Licences granted by lord.]—To prove a prescriptive right of fishery as appurtenant to a manor old licences of the ct. rolls granted by the lords of the manor in consideration of certain rents to fish in the locus in quo are evidence, without proof of rents being paid if it appears that such rents have been paid in modern times or that the lords of the manor have exercised other acts of ownership over the fishery.—ROGERS v. ALLEN (1808), 1 Camp. 309.

1551. Recitals in deed—Showing ancestry of owner.]—In an action of trespass, for taking & impounding pltf.'s cattle, in P. & G. field, deft. pleaded, first, that T. B. & his ancestors had been immemorially used to have, for themselves, & their heirs & assigns, the sole & several pasturage in 217 acres of the P. & G. field, in gross, for all his & their cattle, from Sept. 4, in one year, to Apr. 5, in the following year; that T. B. in 1755, by indenture granted the pasturage to S. B. his heirs & assigns for ever; that J. R. F. B., who claimed by descent from S. B. in 1830, demised the pasturage to deft. (not saying by deed), who seized pltf.'s cattle, because they were depasturing the land in question. Deft. pleaded, secondly, that for 30 years before suit commenced, J. R. F. B. & his ancestors had enjoyed of right without interruption, for himself & themselves, his & their heirs & assigns, the sole pasturage in the field in question, in gross, stating a demise, but not by deed, to deft., & concluding as in the first plea. It appeared at the trial, that within the last twenty years, encroachments had been made upon the 217 acres, by buildings & inclosures, & that about forty acres had in this way been appropriated by individuals, but no encroachments had been made upon that part of the 217 acres, on which the alleged trespass took place:—Held: (1) these interruptions, being of modern date, did not prove that T. B. had no right to the pasturage in 1755; (2) the interruptions not having been made upon that part of the land where pltf.'s cattle were depasturing, they were not conclusive evidence of an interruption of deft.'s enjoyment of that part; (3) the recitals in a deed-poll of 1800, made by one of the ancestors of the present owner of the pasturage, & relating to the pasturage, were admissible to prove the marriages & deaths of the ancestors of that owner; (4) a lease & agreement made by the ancestors of the present owner, by which they demised the pasturage in question to one U., were admissible in evidence, as proving the seisin of T. B. the original grantor of the pasturage, by showing the enjoyment of parties who claimed under him; (5) the right of pasturage in question was capable of being conveyed, & did not necessarily descend to the heir, & pltf. was not entitled to judgment non obstante veredicto which he had contended for, on the ground that the plea, after stating a prescriptive right in the pasturage in T. B., which was descendible to the heir, alleged that T. B. granted the pasturage to S. B.

Qu.: (6) whether the right of pasturage in question was within the provisions of Prescription Act, 1832 (c. 71), s. 5; (7) whether a right of common in gross is within the equity of that sect.

(8) Semble: the statement that T. B. demised the right of pasturage in question, without stating that he demised it by deed, was good after verdict. —WELCOME v. UPTON (1840), 6 M. & W. 530; 9 L. J. Ex. 154; 151 E. R. 524.

1563. —Right to fish.]—We must act upon that salutary law which distinguishes between a mere easement & the right to take a profit. It is a good custom for all the inhabitants of a parish to dance in a particular spot, or the like; but a custom to take as a profit what is valuable would be very injurious to the owner & of but little benefit to the inhabitants, & is bad. Such being the settled law, we are to apply it to this case. It is clear to me that the custom claimed on this plea is to angle for, catch & carry away the fish; but, supposing it were limited to a claim to angle for & catch the fish without claiming a right to carry them away, I think it would be equally destructive of the subject-matter, & bad (LORD CAMPBELL, C. J.).—BLAND v. LIPSCOMBE (1854), 4 E. & B. 713, n.; 3 C. L. R. 261; 24 L. J. Q. B. 155, n.; 24 L. T. O. S. 92; 19 J. P. 502; 1 Jur. N. S. 705, n.; 3 W. R. 57; 119 E. R. 263, n.

Pltf. was a licensed dredgerman residing in one of the parishes adjoining the fishery & applied for a licence for four dredges, tendering £2 2s. in payment. Defts. refused to grant the licence except at the fee of £3 3s. The evidence showed that a fee of 10s. for each dredge had been paid, with a few exceptions, for 150 years. Pltf. refused to pay the fee of had, & used, & enjoyed the easement of entering on so much of the said lands as lie between high & low water-marks of ordinary tides, & then & there to raise the soil & sand, & to carry same away for the purpose of manure:—Held: such defence was bad, as alleging a custom for occupiers of land in a barony to an easement thereon. There is no distinction in this respect between lands the property of the Crown, & lands the property of the subject.—MACNAMARA v. HIGGINS (1854), 4 I. C. L. R. 326; 7 Ir. Jur. 39.—IR.

S. contended that the fishing at this place belonged to the public, or that it had been enjoyed by the public as of right without interruption for so many years that it could not now be taken away:—Held: the right of fishing did not belong to the public, & they could not acquire it by custom because it was a profit à prendre.—*PEARCE v. 1568. ————]—Right to take underwood.—(1) Defts. to an action for taking underwood for fuel from the waste of pltf.'s manor of T. justified as inhabitants of the parish of T., & proved immemorial user by some inhabitants as such, but they did not prove user by the inhabitants generally as such, & exclusive right was claimed by the tenants of the manor:—Held: the justification could not stand either upon custom, as the custom would be for the inhabitants to have a profit à prendre, in the soil of another, or upon a lost grant from a private person, inhabitants being incapable of taking under a grant which does not incorporate them, or upon a lost grant from the Crown, user by the inhabitants generally as such being necessary for supposing a grant to the inhabitants, other considerations against supposing the grant being the absence of evidence of even a de facto corpn. of the inhabitants, the claim by the tenants of the manor, & the unreasonableness & repugnancy to law of the supposed right.

(2) Defts. justified also as occupiers of certain cottages, relying upon user by the occupiers as inhabitants of the parish:—Held: a prescriptive claim as occupier of a certain house or the like could not be founded upon user in a different character such as inhabitant of a parish.

upon the effect of a royal grant to the inhabitants of a parish or village appears to be that, if the grant is for a specified purpose, the grant incorporates the inhabitants so as to effectuate that purpose, but otherwise is inoperative. Therefore, when a ct. or jury is called upon to presume a lost royal grant to inhabitants, it has to presume a royal grant such as to incorporate them.—RIVERS (LORD) v. ADAMS (1878), 3 Ex. 1570. ————]—Action brought by the lord of certain manors adjoining the Severn, a tidal & navigable river, for trespass on the foreshore, parcel of the manors, in a boat & on foot for the purpose of shooting wild duck. Deft. denied that the foreshore was parcel of the manors & even if it were, he claimed the right to go upon the foreshore & shoot & carry away wild duck on the ground of immemorial user, in four alternative ways: as a member of the public in exercise of a general right of all the King's subjects in & over the foreshore of a tidal navigable river; as one of the inhabitants of the manors by virtue of a trust or reservation in their favour which the ct. would presume to have been created by the original grant of the manors to pltf.'s predecessors in title; as an inhabitant of the manors, being a wild-fowler by occupation, by virtue of a custom of the manors; by prescription as a right in gross enjoyed by him & his ancestors. On the evidence:—Held: (1) pltf. had proved his title to the foreshore as part of the manors, & also to a several fishery in the Severn; (2) the public had no rights over the foreshore of a tidal navigable river, when not covered by the tide, except such as were ancillary to their rights of fishing & navigation in the sea. When covered by the tide the foreshore was part of the sea, & the only rights of the public in or over it were the rights of navigation & fishing & rights ancillary thereto; (3) the right claimed to kill & carry away wild duck was—whether wild fowl were birds of warren or mere wild birds in which there was no property—a profit à prendre & could not be claimed by custom; (4) there was not sufficient evidence of user to enable the ct. to presume the existence of a trust, or to establish a prescriptive right.—FITZHARDINGE (LORD) v. PURCELL, [1908] 2 Ch. 139; 77 L. J. Ch. 529; 99 L. T. 154; 72 J. P. 276; 24 T. L. R. 564.

(2) The corpn. exercised their right by granting to persons called dredgers, not being members of the corpn., licenses to dredge, & take oysters within the limits of the fishery. In an action on the case for injury to the fishery, the declaration stated the possession of the fishery, oyster-beds, & oyster-grounds, which was traversed by the third & seventh pleas, & the jury found for plaintiffs on these issues:—Held: the above licenses did not operate as demises of the fishery, so as to entitle defendant to a verdict on these issues.—*COTCHESTER CORPN. v. PART XIII. SECT. 5, SUB-SECT. 1.

1571 i. Grantee—Or his servants.—A., by indenture of lease demised several denominations of land to B., & in said indenture was a covenant that it should be lawful for the lessor, his heirs & assigns, his & their servants, labourers, etc., to bore, dig, & search for mines, minerals, coals, & quarries or marble, etc., & such turf as the lessor, his heirs & assigns, should give liberty to cut:—Held: such reserved right in the lessor was one to be exercised by him, his heirs or assigns, by means of his own servants or labourers, & not one which he could delegate to a stranger not an owner of the estate.—MOORE v. ORR (1855), 8 I. C. L. R. 347; 11 Ir. Jur. 61.—IR.

b. ————Or his tenants.—A. granted land to B. to hold in as large a manner as the same had been enjoyed by B. & his undertenants. He then covenanted that B., his heirs, etc., should have liberty to cut away from the bog of K. a sufficient quantity of turf for the use of his & their undertenants:—Held: B. & his heirs were entitled to turbary for all persons who might become his tenants.—HILL v. BARRY (1834), 4 Hay 638.—IR.

c. ————A. demised lands to B., in as full a manner as B. was then in possession thereof, & he covenanted that he would during the continuance of the demise, give to B. free liberty to cut & carry away as much turf of & on the bog of M., as the said B., his heirs or assigns, or his or their undertenants, should have occasion for, to be cut in such places & in such manner as A., his heirs, etc., should appoint:—Held: a person who subsequently became an undertenant was entitled to turbary on M.—DRUGAN v. CAHAY (1858), 8 I. C. L. R. 210.—IR.

d. ————A. lease was granted to J. "of all that part of the lands of M., together with a right of commonage & turbary for the use of the said farm, as now in the possession of the said J." At the time of the lease J. was in possession of a right of commonage on the adjoining mountain, for the use of said farm:—Held: the lease gave to J. the same commonage & turbary which he then enjoyed.

J. demised to F. & others a portion of the land by the following description: "All that part of the lands of M. now in the possession of the said F. & partners, together with a right of commonage & turbary, for the use of the said farm":—Held: the lessees of the portion acquired by the sublease, as against the head landlord, a proportional share of the common appurtenant to the land.—O'HARE v. FAHY (1859), 10 I. C. L. R. 318.—IR.

e. Cannot be unlimited.—A farm was burdened with a servitude of free grazing for an undefined number of cattle:—Held: the owner of the dominant tenement was not entitled to graze an unlimited number of cattle or so many as to make the servient tenement useless to the owner.—BADENKOOT v. JOUBERT (1920), T. P. D. 100.—S. AF.

f. Cannot be curtailed.—When a lease contained a covenant by the landlord, that the tenant might, at all times during the grant, raise, cut, & carry away from off the bogs of A. & B., the landlord's property, turf sufficient to be expended on the premises demised by the lease:—Held: the landlord was not at liberty to confine the tenant to a particular portion of the bog allocated to him, though it was sufficient & convenient.—HARBOVE v. CONGLETON (1861), 12

SUB-SECT. 2.—EXTENT OF ENJOYMENT.

1574. General rule.—By a grant to a ranger of a forest of all wood blown or thrown down by the wind, & all dead wood, & the boughs & branches of trees & wood in the forest cut off or thrown down, branches cut from trees felled for His Majesty's use do not pass.

The nature of defendant's interest in the profits of the forest is marked by the letters-patent where they describe it as an office to be held by him. This, vi termini, imports that it is held by him, not for his own benefit, but for that of the Crown. He has a certain salary & emoluments allowed him, for which he is to pay the salaries of all the inferior officers & to keep the premises in repair. It is clear that the grantee can be entitled to no other benefit than what the grant expressly gives or can be clearly inferred from it. It is not a demise of the forest & therefore the right of the tenant on a demise of land does not apply to the case (MACDONALD, (C.B.) v. A.-G. v. STAVEILL (LORD) (1795), 2 Anst. 502; 145 E. R. 976).

h. ————A person who has a right of turbary on the land of another is entitled to continue to cut turf so long as he does not render the land incapable of such reclamation as, according to its nature, it is capable of.—WALSH v. JOHNSTON (1913), 47 I. L. T. Jo. 231.—IR.

l. "For general use"—Interpretation of term.—The grant of a farm to plaintiff contained the condition, "the firewood on this land shall be for general use":—Held: (1) any person bona fide requiring firewood in that neighbourhood had a right to take it for his own use from plaintiff's farm; (2) any such person had a right to drive a waggon & horses over the farm to fetch the wood, but plaintiff had the right to define a reasonable track to be so used; (3) any such person had a right to outspan his horses at certain spots on the farm which plaintiff had the right to fix in like manner as in (2), but there was no right to graze the horses; (4) no one could take the trees or firewood for purposes of sale.—*MEYER v. right in the inhabitants of a parish to take gravel without stint from the bed of a river, the property in which was in pltf. :—Held: to be bad in law.—HOUGH v. CLARK & HALL (1907), 23 T. L. R. 682; 5 L. G. R. 1195.

1577. ——— & for commercial purposes—Claim to fish.—A prescription in a que estate for a profit à prendre in alieno solo without stint & for commercial purposes is unknown to the law.

Freeholders in parishes adjoining the river W. had been in the habit of fishing a non-tidal portion of the river for centuries, not by stealth or indulgence, but openly, continuously, as of right & without interruption, not merely for sport or pleasure, but commercially, in order to sell the fish and make a living by it. Riparian proprietors claiming to be owners of the bed of the river brought an action for trespass against the freeholders for fishing :—Held: a legal origin for the right claimed by the freeholders could not be presumed, & the action lay.—HARRIS v. CHESTERFIELD (EARL), [1911] A. C. 623; 80 L. J. Ch. 626; 105 L. T. 453; 27 T. L. R. 548; 55 Sol. Jo. 688, 11. L.; affy. S. C. sub nom. CHESTERFIELD (LORD) v. HARRIS, [1908] 2 Ch. 397, C. A.

1578. Owner cannot enjoy as against himself.]—In the year 1790 S. was seised in fee of a certain farm & also of an estate for life in a certain moor. In 1822, S. & the tenant in remainder joined in a conveyance of the moor to G. in fee, that he might be tenant to the præcipe for the purpose of suffering a recovery, in order to create a mtge. term, but no recovery was suffered. In 1827 S. became bkpt., & by subsequent conveyances his interest in the moor vested in deft., & his interest in the farm vested in pltf. S. always occupied the farm by his tenants who had enjoyed without interruption the right of depasturing their cattle on the moor. In the year 1856, deft. distrained pltf.'s cattle damage feasant when pltf. claimed the right of common by enjoyment as of right for the respective periods of sixty & thirty years mentioned in Prescription Act, 1832 (c. 71).

Held: (1) there was no unity of seisin to extinguish the easement or prevent its existence; (2) the title to the tenements was such that there could not, in point of law, have been an enjoyment of the right of common for the period of sixty years, as of right; for S. being owner in fee of the farm & also tenant for life & occupier of the common, the rights of the tenants of the farm over the common were derived from him, & as he could not have an enjoyment as of a right against himself within the meaning of the statute, so neither could his tenants; (3) the conveyance by S. in 1822 to make a tenant to the præcipe, made no difference, & consequently the thirty years' claim could not be supported.—WARBURTON v. PARKE (1857), 2 H. & N. 64; 26 L. J. Ex. 298; 29 L. T. O. S. 127.

as to exclude C. & those claiming under him from getting coal there; nor could it operate as an exception or reservation out of the grant in respect to B. who had not the legal title in him at the time.—CHETHAM v. WILLIAMSON (1804), 4 East, 469; 102 E. R. 910.

Rights of common.]—See COMMONS, Vol. XI., pp. 45, 46-52, Nos. 620-638, 642-764.

SECT. 8.—SUSPENSION AND EXTINGUISHMENT.

Extinguishment of easements.]—See Part VI., ante.

1595. By unity of ownership—Whether right extinguished—Right to shoot game.]—The king was seised of a chase; & A. being lieutenant thereof in fee, prescribed to hunt stray deer into the manor of S. as a purlieu; the manor came to the king, who granted it to B. ita quod none should enter without the leave of B. This unity of possession & grant did not destroy the prescriptive right of A.—ANON. (1572), 3 Dyer, 326 b; 73 E. R. 738.

—.]—See COMMONS, Vol. XI., pp. 52, 53, Nos. 765-784.

1596. By abandonment—Right to several fishery.]—In an action for trespass to a several fishery in a navigable tidal river in Ireland defts. justified on the ground that the public had the right of fishing. Pltf.'s paper title (if the possession & enjoyment were consistent with it) afforded irresistible ground for a presumption that the fishery was put in defence before Magna Carta. As evidence of possession & user pltf. tendered, inter alia, the proceedings & decree in 1867 in a "possessory suit" brought in the Ct. of Ch. in Ireland by C., pltf.'s predecessor in title, against strangers to the present action; by which decree an injunction was awarded to quiet C., & his undertenants in such possession of their fishing as they had at the time of exhibiting the bill & three years before, to continue until evicted by due course of law, both parties being at liberty to take proceedings at law against each other for ascertaining their titles:—Held: (1) as the decree was a final adjudication, not collusive, & as it could not have been made except upon proof of unbroken user & enjoyment for at least three years before the bill, inconsistent with any actual exercise at that time of a public right of fishing, the proceedings & decree were admissible; the effect of this evidence (not being met by any counter evidence applicable to the same period) was extremely strong to establish possession & enjoyment of the fishery in the latter part of the 17th century, consistent with the paper title & exclusive of the public; (2) a judgment obtained by pltf. in 1826 in an action against a stranger for trespass by fishing in the locus in quo, in which action deft. appeared, but allowed judgment to go by default of pleading, was evidence in the present action of possession of 1826.

Defts. proved that cot-fishing had been carried on in the locus in quo with the knowledge of pltf. or his agents & without interruption by them, as far back as living memory extended:—Held: (3) if pltf.'s right to a several fishery were once proved, the exercise of cot-fishing could not take it away or confer any right on the public, for the public cannot in law prescribe for a profit à prendre in alieno solo, nor acquire any right adversely to the owner under any statute of limitation; & an incorporeal hereditament such as a several fishery, which can only pass by deed, cannot be "abandoned."—NEILL v. DEVONSHIRE (DUKE) (1882), 8 App. Cas. 135; 31 W. R. 622, H. L.

Annotations:—As to (1) Consd. Blount v. Layard, [1891]

m. Effusion of time.]—Pltfs., bought from K. "the right to cut all soft wood on certain lots to make the necessary roads & buildings for such purpose, the cutting to be done within twenty years":—Held: if the trees remained standing at the end of twenty years the right ceased.—LAURENTIDE v. BAPTIST (1908), 6 E. L. R. 105.—CAN.

n. Cancellation.]—Deft. received a permit to cut hay on certain lands, provisional on its cancellation by sale or lease. The owners, while permit in force, granted pltf. a grazing lease over the northern half of the lands:—Held: deft.'s permit was not cancelled. There must be a sale or lease of the whole land before cancellation operates.—DISCOCK v. BARRAGER (1909), 10 W. L. R. 709.—CAN.

Part I.—In General.

1. Church—Religious community—Identity.]—

(1) The identity of a religious community described as a Church consists in the identity of its doctrines, creeds, confessions, formularies & tests.

(2) The bond of union of a Christian assocn. may contain a power in some recognised body to control, alter or modify the tenets or principles at one time professed by the assocn., but the existence of such a power must be proved.—FREE

Part II.—Doctrine and Membership of the Church of England.

3. Doctrine—Evidence of.]—The 39 Articles & the liturgy contain the doctrine of the Church of England, & are to be construed by the same rules as are by law applicable to all written instruments.—GORHAM v. EXETER (BP.) (1850), Brod. & F. 64; 7 Notes of Cases 413; Cripps' Church Cas. 260; Moore's Special Rep. 402; 14 L. T. O. S. 521; 14 Jur. 443, P. C.

4. Membership—What constitutes.]—Whatever difficulty there may be in giving a strict legal definition of what constitutes membership of the Church of England, I think that a person who has been baptised, has been confirmed, or is ready & desirous to be confirmed & is an actual communicant does hold the status of a member of that Church & would be ordinarily regarded & spoken of as such (STIRLING, J.).—Re PERRY ALMSHOUSES, [1898] 1 Ch. 391; 67 L. Part III.—Constitution of the Church of England.

SECT. 1.—CONSTITUTIONAL STATUS.

5. Continuity of Church—Identity unchanged since Reformation.]—At the foundation of this school [in 1548] the Church of England was in existence as a Protestant Church, & its identity from that time to the present cannot be questioned, whatever changes may have since been made in its discipline by the united action of Parliament & Convocation (LORD WESTBURY, C.).—BAKER v. LEE (1860), 8 H. L. Cas. 405; 30 L. J. Ch. 625; 11 E. R. 522; sub nom. BAKER v. LEE, Re ILMINSTER SCHOOL, 2 L. T. 701; 7 Jur. N. S. 1, H. L.

7. — From Saxon times—Relationship to the State.]—A Church which is established is not thereby made a department of the State. The process of establishment means that the State has accepted the Church as the religious body in its opinion truly teaching the Christian faith, & given to it a certain legal position, & to its decrees, if rendered under certain legal conditions, certain civil sanctions. We are sitting in a ct. of law & I propose to confine myself entirely to legal considerations. I say that the accepted legal doctrine is that the Church of England is a continuous body from its earliest establishment in Saxon times. Those who wish to find an index to this legal doctrine, will find it in a portion of SIR ROBERT PHILLIMORE's judgment in Martin v. Mackonochie, No. 6, ante, which he devotes to the identity in law of the Church of England before & after the Reformation, & long as that portion of that judgment is, it is by no means exhaustive of the argument (PHILLIMORE, J.).—MARSHALL v. GRAHAM, BELL v. GRAHAM, [1907] 2 K. B. 112; 76 L. J. K. B. 690; 97 L. T. 52; 71 J. P. 270; 23 T. L. R. 435; 5 L. G. R. 738; 21 Cox, C. C. 461, D. C.

8. Established Church—Position of.]—MARSHALL v. GRAHAM, BELL v. GRAHAM, No. 7, ante.

9. ——— In colony where not established.]—The Church of England, when not established in the colonies, is in the same position there as any other religious body, & rules of discipline adopted by members will be binding on all who expressly or by implication have assented to them. If the religious body constitute a tribunal to determine disputes as to such rules, the decision of such tribunal will be binding, when it has acted within the scope of its authority, has observed such forms as the rules require, if any forms be prescribed, & if not, has proceeded in a manner consonant with the principles of justice. But such tribunal is not in any sense a ct., & the civil cts. will give effect to its decisions as they give effect to the decisions of arbitrators, whose jurisdiction rests entirely upon the agreement of the parties.—LONG v. CAPE TOWN (Bp.) (1863), 1 Moo. P. C. C. N. S. 411; Brod. & F. 293; 2 New Rep. 405; 8 L. T. 738; 11 W. R. 900; 15 E. R. 756; sub nom. LONG v. GRAY (LORD Bp. OF CAPE TOWN), 9 Jur. N. S. 805, P. C.

10. "The Church of both clergy & laity."]—The Church is not the Church of the clergy or of the laity, but of both (FARWELL, L.J.).

The privilege of partaking of Holy Communion is in the eyes of many the highest privilege of a member of the Church of England, & it is not in accordance with the practice of our Legislature that the rights of the laity in matters of such importance should be made dependent on the views of a particular clergyman or even of the Church itself, except so far as those views are by law made binding on the laity (FLETCHER MOULTON, L.J.).—R. v. DIBDIN, [1910] P. 57; sub nom. R. v. DIBDIN, Ex p. THOMPSON, 79 L. J. K. B. 517; 101 L. T. 722; 26 T. L. R. 150, C. A.; on appeal, sub nom. THOMPSON v. DIBDIN, [1912] A. C. 533, H. L.

12. Ecclesiastical law—What is.]—(1) Upon special verdict it appeared that one C. was deprived for preaching against the common prayer:—Held: though there was another punishment appointed by the statute, & not deprivation until the second offence, the Bishop of London & his colleagues by virtue of the high commission to them & others directed, might proceed by the ecclesiastical law, & deprive him for the first; it being against the duty of his office as a minister. & they having power to purge their body of all scandalous members. (2) The form of the sentence was, "that the said bishop by & with the consent of others of the said comrs., his companions," etc.:—Held: the sentence was good.

(3) Albeit the Kings of England derived their ecclesiastical laws from others, yet so many as were proved, approved & allowed here, by & with a general consent, are aptly & rightly called the King's Ecclesiastical Laws of England (per CUR.).

(3) Though regular baptism was by a bishop or priest, yet, if administered by a laic, or by a heretic or schismatic, it was valid baptism; & so valid that it was not to be repeated (SIR J. NICHOLL).

(4) The Law of the Church of England, & its history, are to be deduced from the ancient general Canon Law—from the particular constitutions made in this country to regulate the English Church—from our own Canons—from the Rubric, & from any Acts of Parliament that may have passed upon the subject: & the whole may be illustrated, also, by the writings of eminent persons (SIR J. NICHOLL).—KEMP v. WICKES (1809), 3 Phillim. 264.

15. ———.]—R. v. MILLIS, No. 20, post.

16. ———.]—A benefited clerk was found guilty in the Arches Ct. of ecclesiastical offences & suspended ab officio for a certain time, & a monition was appended to the sentence requiring him not to offend again in like manner. He disobeyed the monition, & a second monition was thereupon issued by the Dean of the Arches, which he also disobeyed. An application was then made to the ct. by motion for his suspension. He was served with notice of the motion, but did not appear, & the ct. suspended him ab officio et a beneficio for three years. The clerk applied for a prohibition:—Held: (1) a monition could be appended to a definitive sentence; (2) disobedience to such a monition could be punished as contumacy by suspension ab officio et a beneficio;

(3) in order so to punish such disobedience it is not necessary to institute a fresh suit, but suspension was properly awarded upon motion in the original suit.

(4) The ecclesiastical law of England is not a foreign law. It is a part of the general law of England—of the common law—in that wider sense which embraces all the ancient & approved customs of England which form law, including not only that law administered in the Cts. of Queen's Bench, Common Pleas, & Exchequer, to which the term Common Law is sometimes in a narrower sense confined, but also that law administered in Chancery & commonly called Equity, & also that law administered in the Cts. Ecclesiastical, that last law consisting of such canons & constitutions ecclesiastical as have been allowed by general consent & custom within the realm—and form, the King's ecclesiastical law. All these laws may be, & are, altered by statutes.

(5) When the question arises what is the English ecclesiastical law, it is not ascertained by calling witnesses to prove it, as if it were a foreign law, but taking judicial notice of what the law is, it is ascertained, by argument founded on legal principles & authorities, what the law is on the particular point. In determining this question I think great weight should be given to the principles of the ecclesiastical law, laid down by those ancient writers on the ecclesiastical law of England whose treatises have been accepted by the judges in the ecclesiastical cts. as of authority. Some weight is to be given to foreign jurists who treat of the law ecclesiastical as practised in foreign countries, but much less weight, for it may well be that they are treating of ecclesiastical constitutions which have never been accepted & received in England. Very little weight should, in my opinion, be given to treatises so modern as not to have yet been sanctioned by the judges of the ecclesiastical cts. I think great weight is to be attributed to the practice of the cts. ecclesiastical, & I think the forms of the writs in use are very strong evidence of what that practice is. I do not think these forms conclusive, for no doubt the forms of pleadings & writs sometimes only indicate what was, at a former time, the received law, but which may have now become antiquated & fallen into disuse, the law having in process of time insensibly changed. But most weight of all is, in my opinion, to be attributed to judicial decisions (LORD BLACKBURN).—MACKONCHIE v. PENZANCE (LORD) (1881), 6 App. Cas. 424; 50 L. J. Q. B. 611; 44 L. T. 479; 45 J. the secularisation of education, the alteration of the law touching religion or marriage, or the observation of the Sabbath, are purely political objects. Equity has always refused to recognise such objects as charitable. It is true that a gift to an assocn. formed for their attainment may, if the assocn. be unincorporated, be upheld as an absolute gift to its members, or, if the assocn. be incorporated, as an absolute gift to the corporate body; but a trust for the attainment of political objects has always been held invalid (LORD PARKER).—*BOWMAN v. SUB-SECT. 2.—CANON LAW.

A. In General.

20. What is—Whether canon law of Europe.]

—(1) That the canon law of Europe does not, & never did, as a body of laws, form part of the law of England, has been long settled & established law. . . . It is not by the Roman canon law that our judges in the spiritual cts. decide questions within their jurisdiction, but by the King's ecclesiastical law. . . . Sir John Davies, in Le Case de Commendams (Sir J. Dav. 69 b, 70–72 b), shows how the canon law was first introduced into England, & fixes the time of such introduction about the year 1290, & lays it down thus: "Those canons which were received, allowed, & used in England, were made by such allowance & usage part of the King's ecclesiastical laws of England; whereby the interpretation, dispensation, or execution of those canons, having become laws of England, belong solely to the King of England & his magistrates within his dominions" (TINDAL, C.J.).

I take that part only of the foreign law to be the ecclesiastical law of England which has been adopted by Parliament or the cts. of this country from the decretals of popes & the authority of councils on the Continent (LORD ABINGER).

It is quite certain that the civil & canon law never had, as such, any authority in this country; but, in the language of 25 Hen. 8, c. 21: "Such laws had effect only so far as the sovereign & people of this realm had taken them at their free liberty, at their own consent to be used among them, & had bound themselves by long use & custom to the observance of the same." In illustration of which, Markstone, following the example of Sir Matthew Hale, classes the civil & canon law in use in this country as part of the common or unwritten law (LORD COTTENHAM).

(2) A question has been raised as to the celebration of the marriage ceremony by a deacon; & it has been asked, if it was formerly required that the ceremony should be performed by a person in priest's orders, by what authority this change was introduced. It appears, by reference to the ancient rituals, that formerly the sacrament was administered before the nuptial benediction was pronounced, & that, as this could only be administered by a priest, his presence was necessary. Marriage itself was also, by the mere nature & force of the contract, considered to be a sacrament; & the solemnisation, therefore, by a priest might on this ground have been thought necessary ; but when, at the Reformation, it ceased to be considered as a sacrament, & when it was no longer required that the sacrament should be administered at the time of the marriage, there was no reason why the ceremony should not be performed by a person in holy orders as a deacon (LORD LYNCHURST, C.).—*R. v. The validity of lay baptism was recognised by the common law of the Church, & the rubrics of Edward VI. & Elizabeth & by the statute law, & this was not altered by the rubric of 1603, nor by the Act of Uniformity nor by the rubric of 1661.

C. Canons of 1603.

36. Construction—With Act of Uniformity, 1562 (c. 4).—Construction of the notice termed 'The Ornaments-Rubric' prefixed to "The Order for Morning & Evening Prayer," which provides "That such Ornaments of the Church, & of the Ministers thereof, at all Times of their Ministration, shall be retained, & be in use, as were in this Church of England, by the Authority of Parliament, in the Second Year of the Reign of King Edward VI.;" & of the rubric prefixed to 'The Order of the Administration of the Lord's Supper, or Holy Communion, which describes the Priest standing at the North side of the Table,' with that which precedes the Prayer of Consecration, & enjoins, "When the Priest, standing before the Table, hath so ordered the Bread & Wine that he may with more readiness & decency break the Bread before the People, & take the cup into his hands, he shall say the Prayer of Consecration," as well as that appended to the same service, regarding the sacred elements; & of the rubric appended to the service for the Holy Communion; that 'To take away all occasion of dissension, & superstition, which any person hath or might have concerning the Bread & Wine, it shall suffice that the Bread be such as is usual to be eaten; but the best & purest Wheat Bread that conveniently may be gotten':—Held: (1) as regards the vestments of the minister whilst officiating in the administration of the Holy Communion, or in other ministrations, the "Ornaments-Rubric," as explained by the Injunctions of Queen Elizabeth, 1559, & the Advertisements of Elizabeth, 1564, made pursuant to Act of Uniformity, 1558 (c. 2), & explained by subsequent visitation articles; when construed with the Canons of 1603-4; & the above Act does not permit the use by the minister while officiating at the Holy Communion of the chasuble, the alb, or the tunicle, but allows of the cope being worn in ministering the Holy Communion on high feast days, in cathedrals & collegiate churches, & requires the use of the surplice in all other ministrations. The use of the chasuble, alb, & tunicle by the celebrant while officiating in the communion service, is illegal; (2) the rubrics regarding the position of the minister during the communion service designate the north side of the communion table as the proper place for the minister throughout the communion service, & also, whilst reading the prayer of consecration, his proper position therefore is on the north side, or the north end of the table, if it is placed east & west, facing the south, & not at that part of the west side of the table which is nearest to the north; the object being that the people may see him break the bread & take the cup into his hands, which they cannot do if he stand with his back to the people, & between the people & the holy table; (3) the rubric regarding the elements requires that the bread to be used at the Holy Communion be pure wheat bread, as is directed by the Canons of 1603-4, & not wafer bread, which is illegal; & does not allow the administering of wine mixed with water, instead of wine only, to the communicants at the Lord's Supper: whether the water be mingled with wine before or during the communion service.

(4) Semle: the use of a biretta, or cap, as a vestment in the service of the Church is illegal.

(5) Semle: the provisions of the Canons of 1603-4 & Prayer Book must be read together as far as possible, & the Canons 17, 25, & 58, upon the vestments of the ministers are an exposition & imitation of the "Ornaments-Rubric." Such ornaments are to be limited, as to the vestments, by the special provision of the Canons themselves, which were not repealed by 1662 Act.—HEBBERT v. PURCHAS (1871), L. R. 3 P. C. 605; 7 Moo. P. C. 39. —.]—(1) The canons of 1603, not having been confirmed by Parliament, do not proprio vigore bind the laity.

(2) Every man may be said to be party to, & the consent of every subject is included in an Act of Parliament; but in canons made in convocation, & confirmed by the Crown only, all these are wanting, except the royal assent.

(3) In the convocation, the whole clergy of the province are either present in person, or by representation.

(4) Ever since the Reformation, the rule has been, that when any ordinances have been made to bind the laity, as well as clergy, in matters merely ecclesiastical, they have been either enacted or confirmed by Parliament.

(5) It is clear from 25 Hen. 8, c. 10, that both the King & the clergy thought it necessary to have the authority of Parliament for abrogating part of the ancient canons, & establishing such part as was to remain in force.

(6) Canons that have been allowed by general consent within this realm, & are not repugnant to the laws thereof, are still in force as the King's ecclesiastical laws.

(7) The clergy are bound by canons confirmed only by the King; but to bind the laity they must be confirmed by Parliament.

(8) Lord Hale, in a manuscript treatise, lays it down that external discipline of the church could not bind any man to submit to it, but either by force of the supreme civil power where the governors received it, or by the voluntary submission of the particular persons who did receive it.

(9) Where the ecclesiastical censures & temporal punishment are both levied against the identical offence, the rule of Nemo bis puniri debet pro eodem delicto is strong against allowing a double proceeding.—*MIDDLETON v. 40. ——[The canon of 1603 although not binding proprio vigore, on the laity, bind the clergy. The Canons of 1640 have never had any binding authority in these cts. Under Clergy Discipline Act, 1840 (c. 86), the Bishop of Ely has a discretion to hear matters arising in his diocese himself or to send it to this ct., & he having exercised that discretion, & letters of request having been sent & accepted, the ct. is duly in possession of a cause. A general power is given to the bishop to send a case here by letters of request; the bishop is not required to give the Archbishop the discretion of proceeding to hear the case, or to send it here by letters of request; it is his own discretion he is to exercise.—COOPER v. DODD (1850), as reported in 7 Notes of Cases, 514.

41. ——[The Canons of 1603 have not been allowed & received so as to form part of the law of England, & bind the laity as well as clergy.

(2) The right of a patron to present to a benefice is a legal right, subject in its exercise to the bishop's right to examine into the fitness of the presentee, & to reject him for sufficient ground. A clerk who has held preferment in one bishopric is not, on being presented to a living in another bishopric, bound, as a condition precedent to his examination, on the question of fitness, to produce letters, testimonial & commendatory from his former bishop.—*EXETER (Bp.) v. The pastor, when elected, was presented to, & approved & instituted by the Crown. The governing body had, apart from the charter of incorporation, funds impressed with a trust in favour of the pastor. The governing body dismissed the pastor:—Held: this ct. notwithstanding the rights of the Crown as visitor, had jurisdiction to see to the performance of the trust, & to determine on the validity of the dismissal, & the ct., having come to the conclusion that it was not justifiable, should grant an injunction

SUB-SECT. 3.—VISITATORIAL POWER.

86. Effect of—Whether jurisdiction of courts ousted.]—The French Protestant Church in London was founded in 1550 by letters patent of the Crown. The pastor, when elected, was presented to, & approved & instituted by the Crown. The governing body had, apart from the charter of incorporation, funds impressed with a trust in favour of the pastor. The governing body dismissed the pastor:—Held: this ct. notwithstanding the rights of the Crown as visitor, had jurisdiction to see to the performance of the trust, & to determine on the validity of the dismissal, & the ct., having come to the conclusion that it was not justifiable, should grant an injunction

The visitatorial power of the Crown does not remove the jurisdiction of the et., or prevent it from exercising its functions in respect of an existing trust.—DAUGARS v. RIVAZ (1860), 28 Beav. 233; 29 L. J. Ch. 685; 3 L. T. 109; 24 J. P. 373; 6 Jur. N. S. 854; 8 W. R. 225; 54 E. R. 355.

SUB-SECT. 3.—VISITATORIAL POWER.

86. Effect of—Whether jurisdiction of courts ousted.]—The French Protestant Church in London was founded in 1550 by letters patent of the Crown. The pastor, when elected, was presented to, & approved & instituted by the Crown. The governing body had, apart from the charter of incorporation, funds impressed with a trust in favour of the pastor. The governing body dismissed the pastor:—Held: this ct. notwithstanding the rights of the Crown as visitor, had jurisdiction to see to the performance of the trust, & to determine on the validity of the dismissal, & the ct., having come to the conclusion that it was not justifiable, should grant an injunction

The visitatorial power of the Crown does not remove the jurisdiction of the ct., or prevent it from exercising its functions in respect of an existing trust.—DAUGARS v. RIVAZ (1860), 28 Beav. 233; 29 L. J. Ch. 685; 3 L. T. 109; 24 J. P. 373; 6 Jur. N. S. 854; 8 W. R. 225; 54 E. R. 355.

112. — Error or defect—Ground for appeal.]—KILDARE (BP.) v. DUBLIN (ARCHBP.), No. 111, ante.

113. — Proceedings with view to punishment.]—The Archbishop of York, after the passing of Church Discipline Act, 1840 (c. 86), cited the dean & chapter of York, enjoining them to cite the canons, registrar, & officers whose presence might be required, to appear at a visitation of the dean & chapter, canonically to receive & submit to the archbishop's intended "metropolitan visitation, examinations, due corrections," etc., to exhibit their statutes, etc. if required, pay the due procurations, & further to do & receive what the business & nature of such a visitation require. He also appointed a commissary for holding the visitation in his absence, for correcting & punishing by ecclesiastical censures whoever should be contumacious, for administering articles in writing to the dean & chapter, & receiving their presentments & answers, & for adjourning & proroguing such visitation from time to time & place, & completing & dissolving the same, & for doing everything else appertaining to the nature & quality of the said visitation. The visitation was holden, & articles of inquiry delivered to the dean & chapter, touching the administration of their funds, performance of divine service, etc. A canon, in reply to an article as to the repair of chancels, sent in a statement imputing simony to the dean, which was afterwards communicated to the dean by a private letter from the commissary. At an adjourned meeting, of which the dean had notice, but which he, unavoidably as he said, did not attend, the canon delivered a fuller statement of the charge from a paper, which was afterwards deposited with the actuary. The commissary appointed a day for hearing evidence; & the dean was requested, by letter, written at the archbishop's desire by his secretary, to attend & meet the accusation. No formal articles or libel were ever exhibited; nor was the dean ever cited to answer any charge. On the appointed day the dean attended, but disclaimed the jurisdiction, obstructed the proceedings, was pronounced in contempt, withdrew contumaciously, & did not appear again. The commissary decreed to proceed in penam in his absence, & heard counsel & evidence on the charge, but refused to hear counsel for the dean till he should purge his contempt, which was not done; & the commissary gave judgment, declaring the charge proved, & that sentence of deprivation must be passed. The archbishop then passed sentence, by which he recited the above proceedings, & adjudged that the dean had committed & was convicted of simony, & was in contempt, deprived him of the dignity & place of dean, etc., & monished him not in future to use the dress or ensigns of a dean, on pain of the greater excommunication. The visitation was then adjourned. On motion for a prohibition to the archbishop & commissary against proceeding further in the matter of the said charge of simony, or executing or giving effect to the sentence:—Held: (1) the inquiry before the commissary was not a mere incident to the visitation, but became a distinct criminal proceeding when the commissary entered upon the examination of proofs, as above stated, with a view to punishment; (2) such inquiry was a "criminal proceeding" within sect. 23 of the above Act, those words not being restrained by the recital of sect. 1, which mentions only "proceeding in causes for the correction of clerks"; (3) an archbishop or bishop, exercising his general authority as visitor of an ecclesiastical body & not visiting under the statutes of a particular foundation, acts, not personally, but as judge in a ct., & must follow established forms of process & inquiry, at least in hearing accusations with a view to punishment; (4) the proceeding in question was not within the reservation in sect. 25 of the above Act of any authority which the archbishops or bishops may exercise personally, & without process in ct.; (5) the proceeding could not legally be instituted otherwise than as the above Act directs; (6) a prohibition could not properly have been moved for before the visitor proceeded to sentence; but it might well be applied for afterwards, as the sentence had a continuing operation, & as the ct. did not appear to have been dissolved at the time of the motion. Prohibition granted, without calling upon appt. to declare.—Re YORK (DEAN) (1841), 2 Q. B. 1; 114 E. R. 1; sub nom. R. v. YORK (ARCHBP.), 2 Gal. & Dav. 202; 10 L. J. Q. B. 306; 6 Jur. 412.

citation of opposers. On the day named in the notice, the certificate of election was read; & opposers were publicly called to appear on pain of contumacy. Three clergymen, two of them holding benefices in the diocese of Hereford, then offered to appear, & claimed to put in a libel or plea, stating objections to the confirmation, on the grounds that H. had published works repugnant to the doctrine of the Established Church, & had been therefore censured by the University of Oxford. The comrs. refused to hear the objections, & confirmed the election in the form usual where no opposition is made. A rule nisi having been obtained, on behalf of the objectors, for a mandamus to the Metropolitan or his vicar-general to hear the objections:—Held: the objections could not be heard, 25 Hen. 8, c. 20, making it imperative on the Metropolitan to confirm without taking cognisance of such objections; (2) if the objections ought to have been heard, the case was one in which a mandamus ought to have issued; (3) the confirmation of a bishop is a merely ministerial, & not a judicial, act; & therefore no one has a right to appear & oppose such confirmation.—*R. v. 135. ——— Objections.—Power of Archbishop to hear objectors.]—(1) G. having been, in pursuance of letters missive & congé d'élire, elected Bishop of W. by the dean & chapter, letters patent issued to the Archbishop of C. directing him to confirm & consecrate G. Thereupon a citation of opposers was issued, & notice of objections in writing was ordered to be given before a certain date, a day prior to the day fixed for confirmation, & the Vicar-General sat in chambers to consider such objections before proceeding with the confirmation. The objections handed in alleged that the bishop-elect had committed ecclesiastical offences & had published false doctrine, & had thereby contravened the articles of religion, & that he was by reason of such publications unfit to be entrusted with the care & superintendence of a diocese; that he was not a prudent & discreet man, & not at all a fit & proper person to fill the office of bishop, by reason of certain passages in his published works; & further, that he had been a member of certain societies mentioned in the objections. The Vicar-General, after considering the nature of the objections, declined to hear any of the opponents in support of them at the confirmation, & when he sat in ct., after taking the names of the objectors, gave his decision that they were not objections which he could entertain, & he thereupon proceeded with the confirmation in the usual manner. Rules nisi having been obtained on behalf of objectors for a mandamus to the Archbishop of C. or his Vicar-General to hear the objections:—Held: the Vicar-General was right in not entertaining objections of this kind.

Semble: (2) a mandamus will not lie to the archbishop to compel him to inform his mind as to the fitness of the bishop-elect before he proceeds to confirmation.

(3) The practice of requiring written notice of the objections to be presented before the actual ceremony of confirmation is a proper one.—R. v. CANTERBURY (ARCHBP.), [1902] 2 K. B. 503; 71 L. J. K. R. 894; 86 L. T. 79; 50 W. R. 348; 18 T. L. R. 300; 46 Sol. Jo. 282.

Church Discipline Act, 1840 (c. 86), for omitting to perform, or provide for the performance of public divine service in a consecrated building within his parish; the provisions of the 1838 Act, s. 77, only applying to cases where the services of any benefice have been inadequately performed, not where they have been omitted altogether.

(3) Although an incumbent of a parish has a right to object to the consecration of a building within his parish, if the bishop overrules such objection, & proceeds to consecrate the building, such consecration will not be invalid by reason of the dissent of the incumbent.

(4) Act of Uniformity, 1662 (c. 4), does not apply where there are two churches in the same parish, so as to require the incumbent to perform morning & evening service in each of them every Lord's Day, & the words of sect. 2 of that Act "every Church, Chapel, or other place of public worship within this realm of England," must be read, "in each Church" for which there is a minister.

(5) The jurisdiction given exclusively to the bishop by sect. 109 of 1838 Act, has reference only to proceedings taken under that Act, & does not oust the general jurisdiction of the Ecclesiastical Ct. for an offence committed against the Common Ecclesiastical Law.

Proceedings were duly taken under sect. 9 against resp., who neither appeared nor answered throughout, & was adjudged guilty & condemned in costs. Afterwards an inhibition from the Arches Ct., issued against resp., in consequence of which he was prevented from ministering in his church; & the livings were subsequently sequestered for the stipend of the curate appointed by the bishop, & notice to tax the costs was served upon resp. After the adjudication, but before the inhibition & sequestration, resp. discovered, as the fact was, that the patronage of the Dean & Chapter of St. Paul's who had instituted him (the presentation at that time alternately belonging to them & to the Archbishop of Canterbury), had been since transferred by Ord. in Council to the Bishop of London; so that the right to present to the joint living would fall to the archbishop on the next vacancy & to the bishop on the vacancy after. About ten months after the adjudication, & about six months after resp.'s discovery concerning the patronage, resp. applied to the ct. for a prohibition from further proceedings to the Arches Ct., on the ground of no jurisdiction:—Held: (1) the bishop of London was patron of resp.'s benefice within the meaning of sect. 16 of above Act, & was thereby disqualified from acting in relation to the representation under sect. 9; (2) the initiatory proceedings essential to give jurisdiction to the Ct. of Arches were, under the circumstances, contrary to the statute, & void; & the ct. had no jurisdiction to hear or adjudicate on the representation; (3) resp. was entitled to have the rule for prohibition made absolute.—SERJEANT v. Pltf. pleaded in bar 1 Eliz. (c. 19), & that the office, etc. used not to be granted but for the life of one, & therefore the grant of J., late Bishop of S., was void. Resolved: The averment in the avowry that the office is an ancient office, is too general & uncertain. (2) The grant of the office for two lives is void against the successor by the above Act. (3) At common law bishops with the consent of the chapter, might by their charters of feoffments, grants, or leases, bind their successors. 32 Hen. 8 (c. 28), has enlarged the power of the bishop, for by this Act he may make a lease for 21 years or three lives, & the bishop alone may so lease by deed indented following the limitations of the statute.

(4) A grant by the bishop contrary to 1 Eliz. shall bind himself though not his successor. The grant with the ancient fee of an ancient & necessary office is exempted out of the general restraint of 1 Eliz. But where such office has been granted to one, a grant to two is not out of the general restraint. The grant of any ancient office to one with the ancient fee by a bishop, shall not bind the successor unless confirmed by the dean & chapter, for such grants remain at the common law.—SALISBURY'S (Bp.) 185. ———]—Cathedral church—In respect of fabric.]—Upon a reredos erected for purpose of decoration in Exeter cathedral by the dean & chapter of Exeter were sculptured representations in high relief of the Ascension, the Transfiguration, & the Descent of the Holy Ghost on the Day of Pentecost, with figures of the Apostles delineated as forming part of the connected representation of the historical subject. On each side of the reredos, as finials to its architectural form, was a separate figure of an angel. The Bishop of Exeter, at a visitation of the cathedral of the dean & chapter, held the structure to be illegal, & ordered it to be removed:—Held: (1) although the bishop, as ordinary in the exercise of his visitatorial power over the cathedral church of Exeter, cannot at his discretion order any alteration in its fabric, it was within his jurisdiction to find that the sculpture had been unlawfully erected, & on that definite

186. Extent of visitatorial powers.—Appointment of canon residentiary pro tempore.—Prohibition issued to the Bishop of Chichester, who claimed a right to present by lapse under pretence of his visitatorial authority to the office of a canon residentiary of his church, it being a freehold office, & the right of election thereto in the dean & chapter. Qu.: whether, in case the dean & chapter neglect or refuse to appoint a canon residentiary in proper time, the bishop by virtue of his general visitatorial power may appoint pro tempore, till such election be had.—CHICHESTER (Bp.) v. HARWARD & WEBBER (1787), 1 Term Rep. 650; 99 E. R. 1300.

187. — Bishop appointed visitor of foundation by ordinance of founder.—Whether confined to powers as ordinary.—A mandamus, commanding the dean & chapter of a cathedral to restore a chorister, alleged that the office was a freehold in their gift, paid by salary out of their land revenues, & conferring a right to vote on the election of members of Parliament, & that the chorister had been wrongfully removed. Return, that, by ordinances of the founder, for the government of the cathedral, it was provided that, if any of the officers of the cathedral, including choristers, commit a small fault, he may be punished by the dean, but that, "if his crime be of a blacker dye, if it be judged equitable, he may be expelled by whom he was admitted"; & that the bishop of the diocese should be the visitor of the cathedral, to take special care that all its ordinances should be inviolably preserved, to punish & correct all offences committed by officers of the cathedral, & to do all things that are judged lawfully to appertain to the office of visitor: & that the chorister had not appealed to the bishop:—Held: on demurrer to the return, mandamus did not lie, as the remedy for the wrongful amotion complained of was by application to the visitor, who had sufficient & exclusive jurisdiction, although the foundation was spiritual & not eleemosynary, & the office was a freehold office: & it was not necessary to return the cause of amotion.

The powers of the Bishop of Chester are not confined to cases in which he would have had jurisdiction as ordinary, but that he is constituted a special visitor to see that the statutes are enforced; he is empowered to do all things that appertain to the office of visitor—a functionary well known to the law; the law defining & recognising his powers where they are not limited by the founder. One of these powers is, upon appeal, to him to restore a person to an office on the foundation, from which, in violation of the statutes, he has been removed. We were told that the mandamus ought to go, because this is a spiritual, not an eleemosynary foundation; but no authority was cited to show that this distinction is material where there is a special visitor appointed by the founder, although there is a difference with respect to the act of the visitor merely in his capacity of ordinary. The office here is a lay office belonging to a spiritual foundation, & on principle there seems nothing to show for the present purpose that this is to be viewed differently from a fellowship in a college (LORD CAMPBELL, C.J.).—R. v. CHESTER (DEAN & CHAPTER) (1850), 15 Q. B. 513; 19 L. J. Q. B. 485; 15 L. T. O. S. 342; 14 J. P. 654; 15 Jur. 10; 117 E. R. 553.

195. — Admission of churchwardens.—(1) Where an archdeacon was inhibited during the period of the bishop's triennial visitation from exercising any spiritual or ecclesiastical jurisdiction concerning, among other things, the admission of churchwardens:—Held: it was not the duty of the archdeacon during the period covered by the inhibition to admit a churchwarden, & he could not be ordered by mandamus to do so.

(2) By the bishop's inhibition, during his visitation, the jurisdiction of his commissary is superseded, & a party resident within the commissary's jurisdiction may then be cited before the bishop's official principal. The appointment of a commissary for a district does not make it a peculiar.—R. v. THOROGOOD (1840), 12 Ad. & El. 183; 3 Per. & Dav. 629; 9 L. J. Q. B. 211; 4 J. P. 298; 4 Jur. 937; 113 E. R. 780.

199. — Removal of cathedral ornaments set up without faculty.—The Dean & Chapter of the Cathedral of Exeter removed a "reredos" which had been erected in the choir of the cathedral in 1823, & substituted for it a new "reredos" of a different character. The original "reredos" extended across the whole of the east end of the choir. The new structure only occupied about the space required for the communion table in the centre, & on it were carved representations in bas-relief of the "Ascension of Our Blessed Lord," the "Transfiguration of Our Blessed Lord," & the "Descent of the Holy Ghost on the Day of Pentecost." All the figures were cut or carved out of the actual structure during the progress of the reredos. The dean & chapter had obtained no faculty for its erection, & the bishop, on a special visitation of the cathedral, made an order for its removal:—Held: (1) an appeal from the order of the bishop lay to the Ct. of Arches; (2) the absence of an episcopal faculty did not render the erection of the "reredos" illegal; (3) the figures or images carved upon it were not unlawful.—*Boyd v. (2) The question is if a suit, being lawfully commenced in the Archbishop's ct., shall afterwards be prohibited as illegal? & in this case, although the cause cease, yet the suit shall continue; for, by the civil law, the death of plff. or deft. is not any abatement of the libel, but they have a reviver. . . . G. Episcopal Registers.

210. Register of presentations—Right of inspection.]—A bishop's registry of presentations is a public book; & a mandamus lies to him to grant inspection of it to one claiming a right to present to a vacant living, though the bishop claim a right to collate to it. A bishop's registry is kept for the benefit of the public at large, & ought to be accessible to every individual who has, or who can by possibility claim title to, the presentation to a living within his diocese. They are, strictly speaking, public documents, & must be open to the public.

The fact of the bishop being a claimant is a strong additional reason why an inspection ought to be allowed of the books, which are kept by the bishop himself for the benefit of the public.—R. v. ELY (BP.) (1828), 8 B. & C. 112; 108 E. R. 985; sub nom. FINCH v. ELY (BP.), 2 Man. & Ry. K. B. 127; 6 L. J. O. S. K. B. 223.

SUB-SECT. 3. —DIOCESAN CHANCELLORS AND OTHER OFFICERS.

A. The Diocesan Chancellor.

(a) In General.

212. Nature of office—Within Sale of Offices Act, 1551 (c. 16).]—The Chancellor, Register, & Commissary in the Ecclesiastical cts., are officers within Sale of Offices Act, 1552 (c. 16), & restrained from buying or selling their offices.—TREVOR'S CASE (1611), 12 Co. Rep. 78; Cro. Jac. 269; 77 E. R. 1356.

213. ——— Freehold.]—(1) The ct. will not grant a prohibition to stay a suit in the Ecclesiastical Ct. against the chancellor of a bishop, to examine whether he be skilled in the civil law, although the bishop had granted him the office for life.

(2) If an office of skill be granted to one for life who hath no skill to execute the office, the grant is void, & he hath no frank-tenement in it. A prohibition is for two causes: first to give to us jurisdiction of that which doth belong unto us; & secondly, when a thing is done against the law, & in breach of the law, then we use to grant a prohibition (DODDERIDGE, J.).

(3) The chancellor of a diocese is vicar-general to the bishop, & if the bishop will not elect a chancellor, the metropolitan must. For the bishop cannot be judge in his own consistory. The bishop ought to examine the chancellor before admitting him, but can do so afterwards. The chancellor can be deprived even after admittance (RICHARDSON, C.J.).—SUTTON'S CASE (1627), Godb. 390; Cro. Car. 65; Lat. 228; Litt. 22; Noy, 91; 78 E. R. 230.

224. — Reservation of certain causes.]—By letters patent appointing a chancellor for a diocese the bishop gave him power, in the absence of the bishop from his Consistory Ct., to determine certain causes, "Nevertheless first consulting us & our successors, & having our consent in case either party earnestly crave our judgment." A suit was promoted for the removal of certain ornaments from a church in the diocese, & the respondents in their reply asked that the bishop should be first consulted & his consent had, & earnestly craved his judgment. The chancellor heard the suit, & delivered a judgment in which he held that he had jurisdiction & dealt with the merits of the case. It appeared from the judgment, though not so stated in terms, that he had not consulted the bishop or obtained his consent either to the hearing of the suit or the terms of the judgment. On appeal from a refusal to direct the issue of a writ of prohibition:—Held: the limitation in the patent was not illegal; it did not relate to procedure, but had the effect of excluding the jurisdiction of the chancellor over the excepted causes; the absence of jurisdiction sufficiently appeared on the face of the proceedings; & as the objection to the hearing of the suit by the chancellor had not been abandoned or waived, a writ of prohibition should issue.—R. v. TRISTRAM, [1902] 1 K. B. 810; 71 L. J. K. B. 418; 86 L. T. 515; 50 W. R. 477; 18 T. L. R. 406, C. A.

229. Improper exercise of jurisdiction—Liability in damages.]—(1) An action upon the case was held not to lie against the vicar-general of the bishop for excommunicating pltf. with the greater excommunication, for contumacy in not taking upon him administration of an intestate's effects, to whom pltf. was next of kin, & had intermeddled with the goods, etc., although the citation by which pltf. was cited was void, by reason that it required him to appear & take administration, etc., without leaving him an option to renounce it, & the proceedings thereupon had been set aside upon appeal; for the vicar-general had jurisdiction over the subject-matter, viz. the granting administration, & there was no malice.

(2) This action is not maintainable if the ecclesiastical Ct. had a general jurisdiction over the subject-matter, & that it had general jurisdiction over the subject-matter, & in regard to some of the particulars mentioned in the citation, there can be no doubt. I accede however to the decision of the Ct. of Delegates that this citation must be considered as a nullity. It has left no election to the party cited but obedience to its requisitions (LORD ELLENBOROUGH, C.J.).—ACKERLEY v. PARKINSON (1815), 3 M. & S. 411; 105 E. R. 605.

247. — Registrar acting as proctor—Whether within 54 Geo. 3 (c. 68), s. 10.]—(1) Above Act, sect. 9, prohibits a proctor from permitting or suffering "his name to be in any manner used in any suit, the prosecution or defence of which shall appertain to the office of a proctor, or in obtaining probates of will, letters of administration, or marriage licenses" for the benefit of any other person. Sect. 10 enacts, "that in case any person shall, in his own name, or in the name of a other person, make, do, act, exercise, or perform any act, matter, or thing whatsoever, in any way appertaining or belonging to the office, function, or practice of a proctor, for or in consideration of any gain, fee, or reward, or with a view to participate in the benefit to be derived from that office, function, or practice of a proctor, without being admitted & enrolled, he shall forfeit £50": Held: construing these two sections together, the acts intended by the latter section to be prohibited were those which were legally incident to the office of a proctor; not those which, though usually performed by him, were not of right incident to that office.

(2) Therefore, a registrar of an ecclesiastical ct., who, in cases where there was no testamentary contest, had prepared the documents, & done the acts necessary, for obtaining letters testamentary & probates of wills, & other similar matters, has not thereby subjected himself to the penal imposed by sect. 10.—STEPHENSON v. The registrars appointed a deputy, subject to the approbation & consent of the bishop, who on being informed of it, answered that "for good & sufficient reasons" he disapproved of the party nominated, but decline specifying his reasons. 259. — Grant in reversion—Whether valid.]—Special verdict on an action on the case for disturbance in the offices, (1) Of official of an archdeaconry; (2) Of commissary to a bishop: & adjudged, that a grant of them in reversion is good. 37 Hen. 8, c. 17, does not restrain a lay person & bachelor of the civil law only from holding the offices of commissary, chancellor, or official to a bishop.

1 Eliz. c. 10, & 13 Eliz. c. 10, restrain bishops & archdeacons from granting the offices above-mentioned, so as to bind successors for a longer term than one life, unless usually granted in reversion.—WALKER v. LAMB (1632), Cro. Car. 258; 79 E. R. 825.

264. Receiver—Restrained from performing alleged duties—Remedy.]—By a grant or patent, dated in 1801, the then Bishop of E. having, as the grant stated, "confidence in the probity, fidelity, care & industry of P." granted to P., who was a solicitor, "the office of receiver of all issues, profits, & sums of money, arising & issuing" from the possessions of the see, to hold to P. by himself or his sufficient deputy or deputies, to be approved of by the bishop & his successors, for his life. The office of receiver was an ancient office, & had been exercised before the restraining statute of 1 Eliz., c. 19. P. held the office under three successive bishops, during the whole of which time he not only received the rents, but negotiated the renewals of leases, & prepared the leases of the see, & likewise attended all searches for records in the bishop's muniment room, of which he kept a key; for the performance of which acts he received fees & emoluments. It appeared also that his predecessor in office, who had held the office since 1785, had done the same. Upon the accession of A. to the bishopric in 1836, he refused to admit P.'s claim of right to perform these last-mentioned acts; upon which P. filed his bill against the bishop, praying a declaration of the rights in question in his favour, that he might be quieted in the possession of the office, & that the bishop might be restrained by injunction from obstructing pltf. in the exercise of such rights, & from doing acts in contravention of them :—Held : (1) pltf.'s claims were not of such a nature as to induce this ct. to interfere to protect them, without being well satisfied (which the ct. was not) that his legal remedy was insufficient to do him complete justice; (2) the relief sought being analogous to the specific performance of an agreement, the bill must fail, on the ground of want of mutuality; the nature of the duties and services asserted by pltf. being such as to preclude the possibility of a decree in this ct. against him, compelling their specific performance.—PICKERING v. ELY (Bp.) (1843), 2 Y. & C. Ch. Cas. 249; 12 L. J. Ch. 271; 7 Jur. 470; 63 E. R. 109.

265. Seal keeper—Tenure of office.]—Upon the trial of various issues raised upon a return to a writ of mandamus, commanding deft. to deliver up the seal of the Consistory Ct. of the diocese of L., it appeared that deft. had been appointed by the chancellor of 1821, by an instrument under seal, to hold the office of seal keeper "in as full & ample a manner as his predecessors had held it." It appeared that for many years, as far back as 1766, the office had been held for life, or during good behaviour, if the grantor should so long continue in the office of chancellor; but there was no record of such an office in the registry of the diocese in very ancient times, nor in very old books; & it appeared that in the cts. of the Archbishop of Canterbury & Bishop of London, the seal keeper was orally appointed during will & pleasure :—Held : this was evidence from which the ct., being placed in the situation of a jury, ought to infer, that the office of seal keeper was an ancient office, which might be granted to the holder for life, or during good behaviour, if the grantor should so long continue in the office of chancellor.—R. v.

267. Nature of office—Freehold.]—BALLARD v. GERAUD, No. 241, ante.

268. Admission to office—Bye-law by dean & chapter requiring oath—Whether valid.]—A dean & chapter who have power to make bye-laws cannot make a bye-law that an archdeacon shall take the oath of canonical obedience before he is admitted into his office.—R. v. TRINITY CHAPEL, DUBLIN (DEAN & CHAPTER) (1722), 8 Mod. Rep. 27; 88 E. R. 21.

269. Glebe—No part of bishopric.]—The glebe of an archdeaconry is not any part of the possessions of the bishopric.—DENNY v. EAKENSTALL (1595), Cro. Eliz. 430; 78 E. R. 670.

270. Representation of archdeaconry in convocation—Qualification of candidate—Jurisdiction of temporal court.]—The Archbishop of Y. as President of the Convocation of his province having decided that a candidate who had been elected to represent an archdeaconry in the Lower House was disqualified:—Held: the ct. of Q. B. had no jurisdiction to grant a mandamus commanding the Archbishop to admit the candidate to Convocation.—R. v. YORK (ARCHBP.) (1888), 20 Q. B. D. 740; 57 L. J. Q. B. 306; 59 L. T. 443; 52 J. 273. Jurisdiction—Whether concurrent with episcopal jurisdiction.]—A person residing within a peculiar archdeaconry, cannot in general be sued in the Bishop's Ct. But where the archdeaconry is not peculiar, the bishop & archdeacon have concurrent jurisdiction.—ROBINSON v. GODSALVE (1696), 1 Ld. Raym. 123; 91 E. R. 978.

an appeal lies from the archdeacon to the chancellor of the diocese, & from him to the Arches Ct. of Canterbury. The Archdeacon of N. has no separate jurisdiction, therefore it is not competent for him to sign letters of request to this ct.; his is not an exempt jurisdiction. The Chancellor of N. has jurisdiction, even if the archdeacon has no separate jurisdiction, & although the proceedings were commenced in his ct., there cannot be joint letters of request signed by the archdeacon & the chancellor of the diocese together to this ct. passing over the intermediate right of appeal. A delegated power is given to the chancellor, & it cannot be delegated to this ct.—STEWART v. BATEMAN (1842), 3 Curt. 201; 163 E. R. 702.

275. Control of clergy—Request to preach visitation sermon.]—HUNTLEY'S CASE (1626), 4 Burn's Eccl. Law 27.

276. As to fabric of churches—Report on alteration—Adoption by court.]—(1) Articles having been filed under the Church Discipline Act, 1840 (c. 80), against a clergyman for making certain alterations in his church without having first obtained a legal sanction to them, he gave an affirmative issue thereto. The ct. then requested the archdeacon of the district in which the church is situated to inspect such alterations, & to report to it as to their nature & propriety, which he did:—Held: the ct. would adopt the recommendation of such a report, unless it contained some grievous misstatements of fact, or erroneous conclusion of law.

(2) The ct. ordered a confirmatory faculty to issue in regard to those alterations which met with the archdeacon's approval, & admonished the clergyman to restore the church in every other respect to the state it was in before he commenced the alterations.—*SIEVEKING & EVANS v. C. Visitation.

277. Right to fees—Procurations—In respect of impropriate rectory.]—SANDERSON v. CLAGGET, No. 191, ante.

278. ————— Liability of incumbents & churchwardens.]—(1) Except in those archdeaconries where by arrangement with the Ecclesiastical Comrs. procurations in respect of the archidiaconal procurations are not required to be paid by the clergy, the incumbents of parishes cited to attend the annual visitation of the archdeacon within whose jurisdiction their benefices are situated, if not otherwise exempt, are legally bound to pay procurations to the archdeacon at the customary rate, notwithstanding that the archdeacon has not personally visited the parish in respect of which the procurations are claimed either personally or by deputy, & although the visitation is held in another parish or in the cathedral of the diocese & for a number of parishes collectively.

The Archdeacon of E. claimed in a civil suit brought against the incumbent of a parish within his archdeaconry a procuration of ten shillings in respect of his annual visitation in that year held for a number of parishes within the archdeaconry, including deft.'s parish, on May 8, 1911, in a parish of which deft. was not the incumbent, & in the cathedral of the diocese. Deft. was cited to attend the visitation, but did not appear at it or pay the sum claimed from him. At the hearing it appeared that no arrangement had been made with the Ecclesiastical Comrs. under which procurations in respect of the archdeacon's visitation would not be required to be paid, & that ten shillings was the amount at which the procurations in kind formerly payable to the archdeacon in respect of deft.'s parish had been commuted:—Held: (2) deft. was legally liable to pay to the promovent the customary procuration of ten shillings due & payable to him as archdeacon in respect of his visitation in 1911, notwithstanding that the archdeacon had not visited deft.'s parish either personally or by deputy, but had held his visitation outside deft.'s parish & for a number of parishes at one & the same time; (3) Ecclesiastical Fees Act, 1867 (c. 135), & the Tables of Fees thereunder afforded no defence to the suit, as the fees under that Act, so far as they relate to visitations, are confined to fees payable by the churchwardens of parishes in cases where they have funds to pay them, & are not fees which affect, or are substituted for, procurations payable by the incumbents of parishes.

(4) The ct. ordered that as long as deft. remained beneficed in the benefice of which he was incumbent at the date of the judgment in the suit, he should pay to the Archdeacon of E. for the time being the annual sum of ten shillings in respect of procurations due & payable by him to the archdeacon in respect of the archidiaconal visitations from & inclusive of the year 1912 & onwards.—*EXETER (ARCHDEACON) v. 280. Registrar—Nature of office—Whether within Sale of Offices Act, 1551 (c. 16).]—A bond given by any of the officers mentioned in above Act for securing all the profits of the office to the person appointing, is void by that statute. So is a bond given by such an officer to surrender whenever the person appointing chose. The office of registrar of an archdeaconry is an office within that statute.—*LAYNG v. 284. — Right to visitation fees—From churchwardens—By custom.]—From 1727 to 1801 visitation fees of the unvarying amount of 7s. 6d. for the Easter visitation, & 4s. 6d. for the Michaelmas visitation, were received by the registrars of an archidiaconal ct. from the churchwardens of a parish within the archdeaconry. From 1801 to 1857 fees of a varying amount, but always slightly in excess of 7s. 6d., & 4s. 6d. were received. A dispute having arisen in 1857, as to the fees payable to the registrars, & an action having been brought by the registrars, to recover fees of 7s. 6d. & 4s. 6d. for the Easter & Michaelmas visitations in 1857 & subsequent years:—Held: the uniform receipt for 71 years of the amounts of 7s. 6d. & 4s. 6d. was overwhelming evidence that the excess subsequently claimed was an usurpation on the part of the registrars, but that such modern usurpation did not affect their title to the original fees of 7s. 6d. & 4s. 6d. which had been received for 130 years, & that in favour of vested interests a legal origin of the right to those fees would be presumed unless the contrary were proved.—SHEPARD v. PAYNE (1864), 10 C. B. N. S. 132; 3 New Rep. 580; 33 L. J. C. P. 158; 10 L. T. 193; 28 J. P. 270; 10 Jur. N. S. 540; 12 W. R. 581; 143 E. R. 1075, Ex. Ch.

285. — Nature of churchwardens' liability.]—The liability of churchwardens to pay the fee of the registrar to an archdeacon is not personal, but is contingent upon their possessing funds out of which the fees may be legally paid. Therefore, where churchwardens had no funds in their hands for the repairs of the church, or for any other expense incident to their office, except by voluntary subscriptions, & were without the means of obtaining funds:—Held: they were not liable to pay the fee of the registrar due upon a visitation of the archdeacon.—VELEY v. PERTWEE (1870), L. R. 5 Q. B. 573; 39 L. J. Q. B. 195; 22 L. T. 713; 34 J. P. 824; 18 W. R. 1025.

SUB-SECT. 1.—IN GENERAL.

291. Creation.—By translation of abbot & prior —Whether valid.]—Hen. 8, translated the Abbot & Prior of Norwich by his letters patent, & created them by the name of dean & chapter, who surrendered their possessions to Edw. 6; Edw. 6 reincorporated them by the name of "The Dean & Chapter of the Cathedral Church of the Holy & undivided Trinity of Norwich, of the foundation of Edward the Sixth," & regranted their possessions to them, omitting the words "of the foundation of Edward the Sixth:"—Held: (1) the translation, if there were any defect in it, was made good by 35 Eliz. c. 3; (2) the misnomer in the regnant by Edw. 6, if material, was cured by the Statute of Confirmations, 1547 (c. 8); (3) the old corporation remained, notwithstanding the surrender.—NORWICH'S (DEAN & CHAPTER) CASE (1598), 3 Co. 292. As corporation aggregate—Chapter apart from dean.]—ELKE'S CASE (1563), Moore, K. B. 51; 72 E. R. 434.

293. ————By the common law a dean & chapter, being a corp'n. aggregate, might have made what estates they would of their possessions, as any person owner of a fee simple might do. But a bishop, or a dean of the possessions of his deanery, or other ecclesiastical person being a single corp'n., were not entrusted by the law singly, without the consent of the chapter, patron, or ordinary, as the case required, to alien their possessions. . . . The dean & chapter are one thing & the dean another in person & possession; yet the dean & chapter cannot present the dean to the church; but they may present one of the chapter; for it is no perfect corp'n. without the dean, as it is without the chapter. Therefore a gift or alienation to the chapter, the deanery being void, is not good (BRIDGMAN, C. J.).—LYN v. WYN (1665), O. Bridg. 122; 121 E. R. 502.

297. Regulation—By statutes made by bishop—Statute contrary to policy of ecclesiastical establishment—Construction.]—A statute made in 1663 by the Bishop, with the consent of the chapter, of Exeter, conferring upon every canon residentiary who should cease to be such by promotion to a higher degree & dignity in the Church of England (unless it be by voluntary resignation, etc.) the right of receiving to his own use the whole profits & advantages of the canonry for the following year, supposing such a statute to be valid, is at all events contrary to the policy of the ecclesiastical establishment, & to be construed strictly: therefore, where deft., who was dean & canon of that chapter, resigned the same in order to obtain promotion to another deanery, to which he was shortly afterwards promoted:—Held: he was not within the statute, not having ceased to be a member of the former church by promotion to the latter, but having ceased to be so before his promotion: besides, his resignation having been voluntary, he was expressly excluded by the terms of the exception; a promotion from one deanery to another seems not a promotion to a higher degree. The admission of plff. as canon into plenum jus, although not made until a year after his first admission, related back to the time when his title to the profits accrued, so as to enable him to maintain an action for them.—GARNETT v. 300. ———— Whether valid—Chapter without dean.]—A chapter although it hath no dean, is within 13 Eliz., c. 10; which is a general law; therefore if such chapter grant a next avoidance, it is void ab initio; for otherwise, as there is no dean on whose death it might determine, it would be good for ever.—SOUTHWELL (CHAPTER) v. 303. Relationship with bishop.]—The statute regulating appeals from archdeacons does not appear to me to regulate any appeals from deans & chapters; for a dean & chapter are of higher rank than an archdeacon. . . . (2) In pleading an act done by a corp., as entering for a forfeiture, a deed to enter need not be shown. In pleading a lease by a dean & chapter the omission of part of their corporate name, is fatal.—EDGAR & WEBB v. SORRELL (1829), Cro. Car. 169; 79 E. R. 748.

In such an action by a dean & chapter, if the name of the present dean is mentioned at the beginning of the declaration, & it is afterwards laid that the occupation was, "by the permission of the dean & chapter," & it appears in evidence that deft. occupied only in the time & by the permission of a former dean, this is a fatal variance.—*ROCHESTER (DEAN & CHAPTER) v. 306. Whether subject to statutes of limitation.]—The Dean & Chapter of W. made a grant of manor lands for three lives. In 1820, shortly after the death of the surviving life, they, by letter, requested the party holding the deed of grant to deliver it up to them. In 1822, the deed not having been delivered up, they wrote a second letter, referring to an interview held on the subject, & expressing surprise that no time had been fixed for handing over the document. Of this letter no notice was taken by the party holding the grant. In 1844, the dean & chapter filed a bill for the delivery up of the deed. Deft. by his answer set up Stat. Limitations as a bar to their claim:—Held: the non-compliance with the letter of 1822 constituted a conversion; plffs. were barred by the statute.

If I am to consider the dean & chapter in the same position as any man under no disability, of full age, seised in fee simple of the land, & I think, I must so consider them, the question is, is there not, if the letters written in 1822 were not followed by compliance, such a refusal as acts as a conversion, & which puts the parties in a position adverse to each other? Very little establishes conversion. Plffs.' counsel have not established any especial parliamentary privilege in the dean & chapter, exempting them from the operation of Stat. Limitations. I must, therefore, hold them to be barred by it (KNIGHT-BRUCK, V.C.).—WELLS (DEAN & CHAPTER) v. DODDINGTON (1845), 2 Coll. 73; 14 L. J. Ch. 304; 5 L. T. O. S. 170; 9 Jur. 768; 63 E. R. 642.

B. Deans of Chapters.

310. Nature of office—Whether temporal or spiritual promotion—Deanery created by Act of Parliament.]—The Deanery of Wells is a spiritual & not a temporal promotion, nor is it a donative, therefore leases made by the dean need not the confirmation of the King, nor even of the bishop, & the Act of Parliament that erected the new deanery on the surrender of the old one, & gave the nomination of the dean to the King, enacting also, that the new dean & his successors might grant, demise or depart with their possessions in the same manner as the ancient deans could, whose leases only required the confirmation of their chapter.

The lands & possessions of the prebend of C. were annexed by the Act to the deanery, but not the prebend itself:—Qu.: whether in that case the dean taking another prebend in the same cathedral may be deprived as having two promotions; & whether the deanery is thereby vacated ipso facto, or only voidable by sentence.—WALROND v. POLLARD (1568), 3 Dyer, 273; 73 E. R. 610.

311. Appointment—Old foundation—Right of Crown to nominate.]—The Deanery of Exeter was founded & endowed by the bishop of that see in 1225; the dean to be elected freely by the chapter from among the prebendaries. For more than 300 years from the foundation the course pursued at the election of dean was for the bishop to issue his licence to the chapter to elect, for the chapter to elect & present to the bishop, & for the bishop to confirm. Elizabeth issued letters recommendatory on a vacancy occurring in 1559, & the person recommended by her was elected by the chapter, & all the formalities of previous elections were observed. Charles II. & succeeding monarchs down to 1839, granted the deanery as it became vacant by letters patent & as of full right, but the same formalities were always observed, the bishop issuing his license, the chapter electing, & then the bishop confirming. In 1839 the Crown issued letters patent granting the deanery, to which the chapter paid no attention. The Crown afterwards issued letters recommendatory in favour of the same person who was grantee under the letters patent, but the chapter elected another person. A rule for a mandamus to elect the person recommended by the Crown was discharged, on the grounds, that the Crown had not the right, which it appeared to claim, of recommending a person whom the chapter would be bound to elect, so that the election of any other would be void; & that, on the other hand, if the deanery were donative in the Crown, it would pass by letters patent, & the person elected by the chapter be a mere trespasser; that, if it were in the presentation of the Crown as patron, or the Crown had a right to nominate a person to the chapter to be by them presented to the bishop for institution, the proper remedy was quare impedit.—*R. v. 315. Rectory annexed to deanery — Effect of Ecclesiastical Commissioners Act, 1840 (c. 113).—Whether rectory vested in commissioners.]—A private Act united & annexed the rectory of T. (not in the cathedral city of Lichfield) to the deanery of Lichfield, & the dean was to be instituted thereto on application to the bishop, without presentation, & be possessed thereof in right of his deanery. Ecclesiastical Commissioners Act, 1840 (c. 113), provided that all the estate of the holder of any deanery or canonry & his successors should be vested in the Ecclesiastical Comrs. for the purposes of the act. Ecclesiastical Commissioners Act, 1850 (c. 94), s. 19, provided that no dean should hold with his deanery any benefice unless in the cathedral city:—Held: the rectory of T. did not pass to the Ecclesiastical Comrs., & the dean of Lichfield was not disabled by the last named Act from holding it.—R. v. CHAMPNEYS (1871), L. R. 6 C. P. 384; 40 L. J. C. P. 95; 24 L. T. 181; 36 J. P. 56; 19 W. R. 386.

317. Sub-dean — Whether independent of cathedral authority.]—(1) If the foundation of the cathedral & the grant of the adjoining land date before the year 1189 & the institution of civil parishes, it will be presumed that neither the site of the cathedral nor of the precincts are within the limits of any parish.

(2) An office held by a person called a sub-dean in a cathedral, but independently of the dean, & not subject to the cathedral authority, is an anomaly unknown to the law.

In the cathedral church of A., from a very early period, there has been an officer called the sub-dean, who is not a member of the chapter, & is not inducted into a stall. Except on very rare occasions, the sub-dean has been also vicar of the parish in which the cathedral is locally situated. For many centuries, & until the year 1852, the north transept of the cathedral was used as a church by the parishioners of the same parish, & the churchyard adjoining the cathedral as their place of burial. No church rate was ever levied upon the parish for the repairs of the north transept, but the whole expense of the maintenance of the north transept & the churchyard was defrayed by the dean & chapter, & the services regulated & controlled by them also. The inhabitants of the precincts of the close maintained their own poor, & held an annual vestry in the south transept of the cathedral to lay a rate for that purpose, nor were they inhabitants of the parish, so that they could be presented to the ordinary if they did not receive the sacrament in the parish church at Easter. The vicar & sub-dean kept the registers both of the parish & of the precincts of the close. Before the year 1813 the names of the inhabitants of the parish & of the close were entered promiscuously in the register books of baptisms, marriages & burials. After 1813 the marriages of inhabitants of the parish & the close were still entered in the same book, but the baptisms & burials were entered in separate books for the parish & for the close. The vicar & sub-dean performed all the ordinary ministerial duties for, & received the usual fees from, the inhabitants of the parish & of the close, & for many years some of the inhabitants of the precincts of the close paid Easter offerings to the vicar & sub-dean:—Held: (3) the right conceded to the parish by using the north transept for divine service & the churchyard for burials, was only a limited privilege, & the incumbent of the parish had only such rights as vicar as were incidental to the privileges conceded, & were limited accordingly; (4) such rights were extinguished in 1852, when a new church was substituted for the north transept, & in 1854, when the cathedral churchyard was closed for burials by an Ord. in Council; (5) the sub-dean, as distinguished from the vicar, had separate rights & duties, namely, the discharge of spiritual functions within the close, & the ministerial fees arising from the duties so discharged; (6) the appointment of sub-dean did not legally incapacitate the dean, when he thought fit, from personally discharging the spiritual duties in respect of the inhabitants of the close.—*BRAITHWAITE v. In such action it is not necessary to allege in the declaration that the benefice has the cure of souls; & its being alleged that he absented himself for a period exceeding eight months together (to wit), on Oct. 10, 1810, for the space of nine months then next following is sufficiently certain of the time of absence, for it shall be intended to be for more than eight months immediately consecutive to Oct. 10, the jury having found a verdict for a penalty corresponding with that period of absence. 331. — Hereford.] — By Eccles. Comrs. Act, 1840 (c. 113), s. 25, in the cathedral church of York, as soon as a vacancy shall occur in the deanery, & in the cathedral churches of Chichester, Exeter, Hereford, Salisbury, & Wells respectively, as soon as every person who was a member of the respective chapters of such churches at the passing of this Act shall cease to be such member, all the canonries shall be in the direct patronage of the Archbishop of York & of the bishops of the respective sees, who shall upon the vacancy of any canonry collate thereto a spiritual person, who shall thereupon be entitled to installation as a canon of such church.

In the cathedral church of Hereford the capitular body consisted at the time of the passing of the Act of a dean & five residentiary canons, who were called the "close chapter," & twenty-two non-residentiary canons, making up the "general chapter." One of the officers in the body was the prelector, who by customary right on a vacancy succeeded to one of the residentiary canonries, & a new prelector was appointed out of the non-residentiary canons by the close chapter. The non-residentiary canons were appointed by the bishop. At York the dean alone appointed the residentiary canons from out of the non-residentiaries. Since the passing of the Act a prelector had been appointed at Hereford; & the last of those persons who were members of the close chapter at the passing of the statute having afterwards died, the bishop claimed under the statute to appoint direct to the vacant canonry residentiary. The prelector claimed to succeed to the vacancy on the ground that several who were members of the general chapter at the passing of the Act were still members:—Held: "chapter" meant the "close chapter"; for that it was the intention of the statute to preserve the vested rights of patronage alone, without any regard to the rights of the body out of which the selection was to be made; & the residentiary canonries therefore were now in the direct patronage of the bishop. — *R. v. 338. Annexation to archdeaconry—Whether severable—Effect of separate grant.]—Henry VIII. by his letters patent erected & refounded the cathedral church of Rochester, & appointed therein a chapter, consisting of a dean & six prebendaries, as well as other functionaries, & officers not of the chapter, & directed that the dean should appoint the inferior officers; reserving to the King, his heirs & successors, the right of nominating the dean & six prebendaries, & their successors, as vacancies occurred. Charles I. by his letters patent granted to A., Archdeacon of Rochester, & his successors the first canonry or prebend which after the date of the letters patent should become vacant by death, resignation, etc., & that the said prebend or canonry should be united & annexed to the archdeacon & his successors. In 1639 A. was admitted to the prebend; he & his successors, being archdeacons, had from that time till 1827 held that prebend, when B., the last archdeacon, died. Each of them was collated & inducted to the archdeaconry, & instituted & inducted to the prebend, separately & distinctly. When the last archdeacon died, W. was bishop, & by him C. was collated & admitted to the archdeaconry, & also instituted to the prebend, but he had not been inducted into either at the time of the bishop's death in Feb. 1827. On June 12, 1827, the see continuing vacant, another clergyman, D., was presented by the Lord Chancellor to the prebend by letters patent under the Great Seal, & he was inducted thereto on June 16, 1827. On June 27, the see being still vacant, George IV. granted the archdeaconry to C., habendum for life, with all profits, preeminences, etc. thereto belonging; & on July 14 following, C. was duly inducted into the archdeaconry:—Held: (1) the prebend being an ecclesiastical benefice, & not a mere office, the Crown might alienate it; (2) Charles I. might lawfully annex it to the archdeaconry, the archdeacon being a corporation sole, & also a spiritual person capable of discharging all the duties & exercising all the functions belonging to a prebend,

& the letters patent were sufficient for the purpose of annexing it, though the annexation was only of that prebend which should first become vacant; (3) C. was entitled to the prebend, & not D.; because an annexation once made cannot be severed, & because C. became prebend in fact, as well as in law, by his institution & induction into the archdeaconry, & the prior institution & induction of D. to the prebend was wholly void.—KING v. BAYLAY (1831), 1 B. & Ad. 761; 9 L. J. O. S. K. B. 131; 109 E. R. 969.

341. Profits—During vacancy—Recovery by new appointee.]—28 Hen. VIII., c. 11, s. 3, gives the "tithes, fruits, oblations, obventions, emoluments, commodities, advantages, rents, & all other whatsoever revenues, casualties, or profits, certain & uncertain, belonging to any" dignity, prebend, or benefice therein mentioned, which shall accrue between the occurrence of a vacancy & a new appointment, to the appointee. 5 & 6 Will. IV., c. 30, directs the profits of dignities or benefices, without cure of souls, becoming vacant during the existence of a certain ecclesiastical commission, to be paid to the treasurer of Queen Anne's Bounty, who is to keep an account of the receipts & expenses, & retain the balance until he shall be otherwise ordered "by competent authority." By a subsequent statute the Crown is declared entitled to appoint, notwithstanding the existence of the commission in question, three persons to certain prebends therein named. One of these appointees, having duly demanded from the Treasurer of Queen Anne's Bounty the profits received by him during the vacancy, brought an action for money had & received, to recover them. A special verdict (on a verdict found in his favour), declared these to be "the net profits of the prebend":—Held: a judgment for pltf. given on this verdict could not be sustained, because it did not distinguish the sources from which these profits might arise, nor show whether they were derived from the corpus of the prebend to which he was individually entitled, or from sums due to him in respect of his share of the funds of the corporation aggregate, of which, as prebend, he was a member.—REPTON v. HODGSON (1850), 3 H. L. Cas. 72; 10 E. R. 28, H. L.; affg. S. C. sub nom. HODGSON v. REPTON (1845), 7 Q. B. 96, Ex. Ch.

342. — Power of mortgage.]—A canon of W. granted the canonry & the profits, etc., to pltf., to secure a sum of money. So far as it appeared on an interlocutory application, the estates were vested in the corp., & the canon was entitled to an aliquot share of the profits. There was no cure of souls, & the only duties were residence within the castle, & attendance in the chapel 21 days a year:—Held: upon this state of circumstances, the security was valid, & a receiver of the profits was appointed.—GRENFELL v. WINDSOR (DEAN & CANONS) (1840), 2 Beav. 544; 48 E. R. 1292.

at Windsor demised by way of mtge. for 99 years, if he should so long live & continue a canon, to the lessor of plff. "All canonry of R. A. Musgrave, of the Queen's free chapel of St. George at Windsor, & all glebe & other lands, messuages, tenements, & hereditaments belonging thereto; & all & every the rights, rents, profits, etc., to the canonry belonging." On ejectment brought on the demise of the mtgee., it appeared in evidence that there was no property attached to any individual canonry, but that the whole property belonged to the dean & chapter, & that the surplus rents, after payment of certain expenses thereout, were divided equally among the dean & the other members of the chapter; that all the canons had houses assigned to them for their residence, but that no particular house was appropriated to any one canonry; that whenever a vacancy occurred the canons had a right of choice of the vacant house according to their seniority, & that the house which was left after the other canons had made their selection, was assigned to the new canon. Deft. had retained possession of the same house which was assigned to him upon his installation:—Held: (1) ejectment would not lie either for the canonry of deft., or for the house assigned to him for his residence as canon; (2) deft. was not estopped, by the mtge. deed, from showing that the house in question did not belong to the canonry.—DOE d. BUTCHER v. MUSGRAVE (1840), 1 Man. & G. 625; 1 Scott, N. R. 451; 9 L. J. C. P. 318; 4 Jur. 631; 133 E. R. 483.

345. — Exeter.]—The canons of Exeter take their houses by succession, hold them in right of their prebends for life, & repair them at their own expense. The chapter, as a body, cannot interfere with their enjoyment of their houses:—Held: though each canon was a member of the corpn. aggregate of the chapter, yet he held his house in severalty as a corpn. sole.—FORD v. HARRINGTON (1860), L. R. 5 C. P. 282; 1 Hop. & Colt. 331; 39 L. J. C. P. 107; 21 L. T. 609; 34 J. P. 120; 18 W. R. 289.

346. Nature of office—Whether "corporation sole."—A vicar choral of the cathedral church of Wells is a "corporation sole," & his personal representative is liable to an action at the suit of his successor in the vicarage, for dilapidations of the house held by him as such vicar choral. Semble: even if he were not strictly a "corporation sole," he still has such a sole estate in the house as to create the liability.—*GLEAVES v. 350. Right to residence & appurtenances—Chichester.—Where a prescriptive ecclesiastical corpn. of vicars choral of the cathedral of Chichester had, besides other estates in common, four vicarial houses with their appurtenances, which had always been appropriated to the several use & residence of the four vicars; & by ancient custom, upon every vacancy the vicars, according to seniority, made their option of taking in severalty any one of such vicarial houses with the appurtenances, of which option an entry was made in the corpn. act book & signed by the vicars:—Held: a new vicar having made an option, which was entered in the act book & signed by all, to take one of the vicarial houses, with certain appurtenances, then in the possession of S., which were not all the appurtenances formerly annexed to & enjoyed with the same house by his predecessors therein, could not maintain an ejectment for the other appurtenances, such as part of the ancient garden which had been leased off by the corpn. before his appointment. For supposing him entitled to make an option of the entire premises, & to have it entered in the act book, as against the corpn.; yet no such option having been made & entered in the act book according to the custom, he had no separate legal title to the premises in question, on which he could maintain an ejectment.—*GOODTITLE d. 351. Right to share in fine on renewal of lease—St. Paul's—Recovery.—A vicar choral of St. Paul's Cathedral is not entitled, during his year of probation, to share in a fine paid on the renewal of a lease by the dean & chapter & vicars choral, of an estate which is one of the sources of the emoluments enjoyed by such vicars choral. Had he been entitled, money had & received would, it seems, have been the proper form of action to recover it, either against all the other vicars choral, or against the pittance, the person entrusted with the collection & distribution of the funds.—*SHOUBRIDGE v. SECT. 7.—CONSTITUTION OF THE CHURCH INTO PARISHES.

SUB-SECT. 1.—THE PARISH.

A. In General.

355. What constitutes.—Within Church Building Act, 1818 (c. 45), s. 59.]—(1) The township of B. was a populous district situated within the parish of W., had constables of its own, & maintained its own poor. It had, from time immemorial, chapelwardens & a chapel of its own. Divine service was performed, & the sacraments of the church administered, in the chapel, the repairs of which were paid for by the township. It had had its own burial ground from the year 1727; but, until then, it had had none but that of W.: &, down to 1740, but not later, the township made payments to the clergy of W. church in respect of burials at B. There was evidence of payments made from 1727 to 1740, to the clergy of W. for churchings at B. Chapel; & of marriages having been celebrated there by license & banns from 1695 to 1754, but not afterwards till 1843, when the chapel was licensed under the Registration Act, 1836 (c. 85). There was also evidence of payments made, from time to time by B. to the churchwardens of W., on account of W. church, beginning in 1689 & ending in 1752: which payments were sometimes entered in account as "levies":—Held: these facts did not show B. to be a parish, within the above Act.

(2) The chapel of B. being insufficient for the accommodation of its inhabitants, they, in vestry, resolved that a grant offered to them by the Society for Promoting the Enlargement, etc., of Churches & Chapels should be accepted, & that the chapel should be enlarged according to the society's plans, "any deficiency in the expense to be made up by the sale" of certain private pews, " & by rates under the Act of Parliament." They also resolved to petition the Comrs. for Building New Churches to erect a new church in the township; & the petition was presented, stating the inability of the inhabitants to build a church, & that the enlargement, now agreed upon, would require a rate of 1s. in the pound for five years, which they had pledged for that purpose. The chapelwardens then borrowed of an individual £600, on the security of the existing & future rates, for the purpose of the enlargement. On mandamus to repay the £600; return, that the sum was not borrowed with the consent of the vestry within the meaning of the above Act:—Held: the writ could not be enforced, the resolutions of vestry not being a consent to the borrowing of money within the above Act.—R. v. WILLIM (1850), 16 Q. B. 1; 117 E. R. 775; sub nom. R. v. BILSTON (CHAPEL WARDENS), 20 L. J. M. C. 63; 16 L. T. O. S. 280; 15 Jur. 506.

C. Notices.

362. Publication—Sufficiency—At principal door of church.]—(1) In the township of T. where was an ancient chapel, a new church was built & consecrated in 1832, since which period divine service had been regularly performed on Sundays in the new church, though parish meetings continued to be held in the chapel, where christenings & burials were also occasionally performed:—Held: (1) the new church, being the church de facto of the place, it was a sufficient publication of a poor rate if the notice required by Parish Notices Act, 1837 (c. 45) were affixed at or near the door thereof, & not at that of the chapel; (2) it was a sufficient publication if the notice were affixed to the principal door only of the church.

(3) In the same place a room was hired for a schoolhouse, in which divine service was regularly celebrated on Sundays according to the rites of the Church of England:—Held: it was not necessary to affix any notice on the door of the school.—ORMEROD v. CHADWICK (1847), 16 M. & W. 307; 2 New Mag. Cas. 55; 2 New Sess. Cas. 697; 16 L. J. M. C. 143; 8 L. T. O. S. 343; 11 J. P. 138; 153 E. R. 1321.

There was no consecrated church or chapel of the Church of England in H., but only a schoolroom licensed for divine service & a Wesleyan chapel. The parish church of K. was three miles from H. A highway rate for H. having been duly allowed by justices was published by a notice affixed to the doors of the schoolroom & of the Wesleyan Chapel in H., & not by a notice on the parish church of K.:—Held: that such notice was a sufficient publication of the rate within sect. 27 of the above Act.—*R. v. D. Distinct and Separate Parishes.

367. Creation—Under Church Building Acts, 1818 (c. 45), & 1819 (c. 134)—Enrolment of boundaries.]—In the year 1823, a piece of ground in the parish of M., Leicester, was purchased by subscription of the inhabitants, & conveyed to the Comrs. for Building New Churches, who erected a chapel on part of it & inclosed the remainder for a burial ground. In 1827, the chapel & burial ground were consecrated. In 1828 an Ord. in Council was made & published, whereby, after reciting sect. 16 of Church Building Act, 1818 (c. 45), which empowers the comrs. to divide populous parishes into two or more distinct & separate parishes; also reciting sect. 21 of that Act, which empowers the comrs. to divide populous parishes into ecclesiastical districts; also reciting that the comrs. had made a representation to the Crown respecting the increase of population & insufficient Church accommodation in the parish; also reciting that it appeared to the comrs. expedient that an ecclesiastical district should be assigned to the new chapel under Church Building Act, 1819 (c. 134); & that the consent of the bishop had been obtained: His Majesty ordered that the proposed division should be made & effected according to the provisions of the Acts. The boundaries of the district were duly enrolled under Church Building Act, 1819 (c. 143), s. 22. No Ord. in Council was made respecting the performance of the offices of the Church in the said chapel, or the appropriation of the fees payable in respect thereof, nor did the comrs. make any order as to whether the fees for burials, etc. were to be reserved to the incumbent of the parish, or assigned to the curate of the chapel, or whether burials, etc. should be performed in such chapel. In the year 1848, the corpn. of Leicester established a cemetery within the borough, under a local Act, by which the burial service over deceased persons removed for interment in the cemetery was to be performed by, & the fees paid to the incumbent who might have been required to perform the service, & would have been entitled to the fees, if the interment had taken place in his parish or ecclesiastical district:—Held: the Ord. in Council was made under Church Building Act, 1818 (c. 45), s. 21, & not under Church Building Act, 1819 (c. 143), s. 16; & that, upon enrolment of the boundaries, the chapelry became a separate district parish for all ecclesiastical purposes; & after the death of the then incumbent of the original parish, the curate of the district parish was entitled to the fees for burial, both in his parish & in respect of deceased persons removed therefrom for interment in the cemetery.—EDGELL v. BURNABY (1853), 8 Exch. 788; 23 L. J. Ex. 65; 21 L. T. O. S. 144; 17 J. P. 520; 155 E. lt. 1571.

369. — —.]—In 1851, the church of T. was built & consecrated, & in 1852 a district was assigned to it by Ord. in Council, as a chapel of ease under Church Building Act, 1818 (c. 45), & Church Building Act, 1819 (c. 134), s. 16, out of the ancient parish of W. At that time deceased inhabitants were all buried in the parish churchyard. By the Act of Consecration & Ord. in Council authority was given to perform baptisms, marriages, & burials in the new church, & the fees were to be received by the incumbent of the district:—Held: the district of T. became a distinct & new parish in 1856 under New Parishes Act, 1856 (c. 104), s. 14, & was a "new parish" within Burial Act, 1857 (c. 81), s. 5.—*CHRONSHAW v. 370. Evidence—Separate churches—Lands intermixed.]—Two parishes, the lands of which were intermixed, had each a separate church, with one patron & one incumbent, who celebrated divine service in each church once each Sunday morning or evening alternately, & christened the children in either irrespective of the residence of the parents. There was also one parish clerk, one communion plate, & one burial ground. There had always been overseers, churchwardens, & surveyors of highways appointed for each parish separately, but the same poor rate in amount had always been assessed in both parishes, & when collected, the amount was thrown into one fund, & applied to the poor of both parishes indiscriminately:—Held: the preponderance of evidence was in favour of these being distinct & separate parishes, & therefore, a joint appointment of overseers for the united parishes was invalid.—R. v. TOMBLESON (1863), 1 New Rep. 524; 27 J. P. 150.

371. Effect of division of existing parish—On right to choose churchwardens—Private Act.]—As a rule, existing customs or rights are not to be taken away by mere general words in an Act of Parliament. But without words especially abrogating them, they may be abrogated by plain directions to do something which is wholly inconsistent with them. And this may be the case though the Act is a private Act of Parliament, & though the particular custom may have been confirmed, years before, by a verdict in a ct. of law.

A parish consisted of four townships or hamlets, D., W., M., & B. D. contained the parish church,

Sect. 7.—Constitution of the Church into parishes; Sub-sect. 1, D., E., F. & G.]

& gave the name to the whole parish. One of the churchwardens of D. was appointed by the rector, the other was elected by the parishioners. The two persons who, in the township or hamlet of M., performed the various duties of churchwardens & overseers, were elected by the inhabitants of M., which hamlet raised & administered its rates quite independently of D., & the churchwardens of D. proper never interfered; & this custom of election in M. by the inhabitants, had been confirmed by a verdict in a ct. of law many years ago. A private Act of Parliament was passed creating D. & W. into one parish, M. into another, & B. into a third. The Act contained a provision that when the three parishes had been constituted, the churchwardens of each should be chosen as those of D. had been chosen & appointed:—Held: though there were no particular words in the Act expressly putting an end to the custom of the inhabitants of the hamlet of M. electing the churchwardens, there were words clearly directing something else to be done entirely inconsistent with that custom, which, therefore, on M.'s being constituted a parish, ceased, & the rector of the new parish of M. became entitled, as the rector of D. had always been, to appoint one of the churchwardens, while the other was elected by the parishioners at large, for that the Act had made D. the model on which the newly created parishes were formed, & were to be governed.—*GREEN v. 372. Formation—By Order in Council—Whether enrolment in Chancery of name, boundaries, etc., necessary.]—The formation of a district or chapelry on the requisition of the Ecclesiastical Comrs., by an Ord. in Council, under Church Building Act, 1845 (c. 70), s. 9, is valid, without any enrolment in Chancery of the name, boundaries, etc., as required by Church Building Act, 1819 (c. 134), s. 6.—*R. v. 373. — Effect of—Assimilation to district chapelry.]—(1) Consolidated chapelries & district chapelries, though differing in origin, are, when once formed, precisely similar in character.

(2) Consolidated chapelries are within New Parishes Act, 1856 (c. 104), s. 14.

(3) Where an ecclesiastical district has been formed out of several parishes, the incumbent of the chapelry in the new district will not be entitled to the fees of marriages, etc. within sect. 12 of above Act until after the next avoidance, or the relinquishment of fees by the incumbents of all the parishes out of which the chapelry has been formed. The incumbent of two parishes from which portions were taken in order to form a consolidated chapelry, appeared to have made no formal resignation of fees accruing in respect of such portions of the chapelry, but stated that when they gave up the right to the parish they considered that they had given up everything:—Held: there was sufficient evidence of a relinquishment of such fees within the sect.

377. Whether part of parish—Evidence.]—A chapelry may form part of a parish although the inhabitants of the chapelry have never been assessed for church rates or repairs, or taken any part in the election of churchwardens of the parish church, & although owing to the magnitude of the parish the chapelry has always appointed separate overseers & levied separate poor rates under Poor Relief Act, 1662 (c. 12). The fact that the vicar of the parish receives the vicarial tithe of the chapelry & that residents in the chapelry are in the habit of being married at the parish church is almost conclusive evidence that the chapelry is part of the parish.—*Re SANDBACH SCHOOL & ALMSHOUSE FOUNDATION, A-G. v. (2) An Ord. in Council, purporting, under sect. 3 of the latter, with the consent of the

(3) The insertion in a general Act of Parliament of a saving clause, providing, that the Act shall not apply to a special case which had previously been regulated by a special Act of Parliament not otherwise referred to, will not prevent the application of the rule of construction mentioned above.

382. — Effect on prior trust deed—Construction of Order in Council.—By a deed of 1840 a certain chapel was vested in trustees, upon trust to permit same to be used as a chapel of ease, dependent upon the parish church, & to permit the vicar for the time being or his curates to officiate as ministers thereof, & to allow the vicar & churchwardens to let the pews, & to permit the churchwardens to receive the pew rents & other emoluments for the benefit of the vicar, after paying the necessary expenses; & the vicar & churchwardens were authorised to appoint the clerk, pew openers & other officers of the chapel. By an Ord. in Council, dated Oct. 1860, the chapel was constituted a district chapel, & it was ordered that marriages, baptisms, etc., should be solemnised & performed in the chapel, & that the fees should belong to the minister of such chapel for the time being, subject to a proviso that so long as the existing vicar remained vicar the fees should be paid to him, but the Ord. did not mention or affect to deal with the pew rents:—Held: (1) the effect of the Ord. in Council was to withdraw the chapel from all the purposes included in the trust deed; (2) to constitute the district chapel a benefice; & (3) to deprive the vicar & churchwardens of the parish church of all right to receive the pew rents, or to nominate the officers of the church. Qu.: whether after the creation of the district chapel the pews of the chapel could lawfully be let & the pew rents received for the benefit of the minister of the chapel.—*FITZGERALD v. 383. Formation under Church Building Acts, 1819, 1839, & 1856—Distinguished from parish formed under Church Building Act, 1818—Parish clerk's right to fees.—A district chapel, created by an Ord. in Council, under Church Building Acts, 1819 (c. 134), & 1839 (c. 49), & 19 & 20 Vict., c. 55, is not equivalent to a district parish created under Church Building Act, 1818 (c. 45), & the parish clerk of such a district chapel is not entitled as of right to the parish clerk's fees within the district chapel as against a clerk of the original parish, whose appointment dates prior to the creation of the district chapel. In such a case, the bishop may, under 19 & 20 Vict., c. 55, s. 14, award compensation to the parish clerk in lieu of fees.—HAMPSTEAD PARISH CLERK'S FEE CASE, Re LANGMEAD (1876), Trist. 54.

385. ——The ancient parish of St. Mary comprised, inter alia, the district parish of St. Mark, attached to the district church of which was a churchyard wherein the remains of the inhabitants of St. Mark were interred. In 1852 a burial board was formed for the whole of the parish of St. Mary, & in 1853 the churchyard of the district parish of St. Mark was closed by order of the Secretary of State, & the remains of the inhabitants of St. Mark's were thenceforth interred in the burial ground provided by the burial board of St. Mary. Such burial ground was consecrated in 1854, & from that time became the burial ground of St. Mary. In 1875 a church called St. James was built & consecrated in the district parish of St. Mark, & a district, part of the district parish of St. Mark, assigned to it by Ord. in Council. By the sentence of consecration & Ord. in Council authority was given to solemnise & perform burials, etc., at the church of St. James, the fees to arise therefrom to be paid & belong to the minister of such church for the time being. The incumbent of St. James' having brought an action claiming to perform the burial service in depts.' burial ground over the bodies of the inhabitants of St. James' buried therein, & to receive the fees for such services:—Held: the district of St. James was a "new parish" within Burial Act, 1857 (c. 81), s. 5.—HARRIS v. LAMBETH BURIAL BOARD (1883), 47 J. P. 501, D. C.

386. Distinguished from district constituted under Church Building Act, 1831 (c. 38).—By sect. 16 of above Act, two churchwardens are to be appointed for every church or chapel built under the provisions of that Act; one by the incumbent, & the other by the renters of pews. Marriage Act, 1836 (c. 85), s. 26, empowers the bishop of a diocese, by license under his hand & seal, to authorise the solemnisation of marriages in a district chapel, for persons residing within the district. By sect. 32 the bishop may, with the consent of the Archbishop of the province, revoke this license. New Parishes Act, 1843 (c. 37), s. 15, enacts that when any church or chapel shall be built in any district, & consecrated as the church or chapel of such district, the district shall, from & after such consecration, be & be deemed to be a new parish for ecclesiastical purposes. & by sect. 17, in every such case of a district so becoming a new parish, two churchwardens are to be chosen for it; one by the perpetual curate of the new parish & the other by the resident inhabitants having a similar qualification to that which would entitle inhabitants to vote at the election of churchwardens for the principal parish. New Parishes Act, 1850 (c. 104), s. 11, empowers the Ecclesiastical Comrs., upon the application of the incumbent of a district church or chapel, with the written consent of the bishop of the diocese, to make an order under their seal, authorising the publication of banns of matrimony & the solemnisation therein of marriages, baptisms, churchings, & burials; all the fees for the performance of which offices are to be payable & to be paid to the incumbent. & by sect. 14, wheresoever or as soon as banns of matrimony & the solemnisation of marriages, churchings, & baptisms, are authorised to be published or performed in any consecrated district church or chapel, such district not being at the time of the passing of that Act a separate & distinct parish for ecclesiastical purposes, & the incumbent of which is, by such authority, entitled for his own benefit to the entire fees for the performance of such offices, without any reservations thereout, such district shall become & be a separate & distinct parish for ecclesiastical purposes, such as is contemplated by New Parishes Act, 1843 (c. 37), s. 15; the church of the district shall be the church of such parish; & all the provisions of New Parishes Act, 1843 (c. 37), relative to new parishes, upon their becoming such, & to the matters & things consequent thereon, shall extend & apply to the said parish & church as fully & effectually as if it had become a new parish under the provisions of that Act. The church of C. was built, & had a district assigned to it, under Church Building Act, 1831 (c. 38). In the year 1840 the bishop of the diocese granted, under Marriage Act, 1836 (c. 85), s. 20, his license for the publication of banns & the solemnisation of marriages in the church, & for taking the same fees in respect thereof as were taken in the mother church by the minister & incumbent thereof for the time being; to which the fees for churchings, baptisms, & burials were afterwards added. From the consecration of the church down to the issuing of the writ of mandamus in the present case, two churchwardens were chosen for the church in the manner directed by Church Building Act, 1831 (c. 38), s. 16; one by the incumbent, & the other by the pew renters. Upon demurrer to the return to a mandamus to the incumbent of the district to convene a meeting of the inhabitants to elect a churchwarden, the return alleging that the incumbent & the pew renters had the privilege of electing the churchwardens, & that sect. 15 of New Parishes Act, 1843 (c. 37), & sect. 14 of New Parishes Act, 1856 (c. 104), were inapplicable:—Held: the return was good. The authority contemplated by New Parishes Act, 1856 (c. 104), s. 14, was not a revocable license by the bishop, but an authority under an order of the Comrs. under sect. 11 of that Act; therefore the district was not brought within the operation of sect. 14 of the Act. Semble: New Parishes Act, 1843 (c. 37), s. 15, is inapplicable to the case of a district constituted, not under that Act, but under Church Building Act, 1831 (c. 38), with a license by the bishop under Marriage Act, 1836 (c. 85).

This authority, if it had been granted by the order of the Comrs., would be of a permanent & irrevocable character; but it has not been granted, & we are of opinion that the revocable authority or license of the bishop is not enough to bring this district within sect. 14 of New Parishes Act, 1856 (c. 104) (per Cur.).—R. v. PERRY (1861), 3 E. & E. 640; 30 L. J. Q. B. 141; 3 L. T. 885; 25 J. P. 229; 7 Jur. N. S. 655; 9 W. R. 383; 121 E. R. 583.

Preliminary proceedings under sects. 14 & 16 were therefore unnecessary, & the district might at once adopt the Act, at a meeting of owners & ratepayers, convened by the churchwardens; & an order of the Secretary of State confirming such adoption was valid.—*R. v. Registers should be made up promptly, & by the person whose duty it is to make them up. The register of baptism, in this case, purports to bear date Feb. 6, 1776, but it was not made up till June, 1777, & then it was made up—not by the person who was minister of the parish at the time of the baptism, or by a person who appeared at that time to have any connection with the parish—but by one who afterwards became the minister of the parish. It must be taken, therefore, that he made this entry after the death of the minister of the parish who was present at the baptism. . . . 395. Rights—Subordinated to spiritual duties.—Claim: that ptff. was vicar of a parish; that a chapel was erected within it & endowed & consecrated for the administration of the sacraments & the performance of all other divine offices according to the rites of the Church of England; that ptff. as such vicar was entitled to nominate & present, & had nominated & presented a clerk to the chapel, but another clerk had been licensed, instituted, & admitted by deft. bishop on the nomination & presentation of certain other defts., who thereby hindered ptff. in the exercise of his right; & he claimed to have his right established & declared. Defence of the last mentioned defts.: That certain freeholders had erected the chapel & conveyed to the Ecclesiastical Comrs., & applied to them under Church Building Act, 1851 (c. 97), to declare the right of nomination to be in defts. who had endowed the chapel, & that before making such declaration a copy of the application was according to the Act, sent by the Comrs. to ptff., he being both patron & incumbent of the parish; that if he had ceased to be patron he stood by & knowingly allowed those defts. to endow the chapel & procure the same to be consecrated in the belief entertained by them as he well knew that he was patron, & that the sending of such copy to him was in fact a sending of a copy both to the patron & incumbent, as required by the Act, & ptff. was therefore estopped from denying that he was patron; & that the right of nomination had been declared to be in those defts., who afterwards nominated. On demurrer to the allegation of estoppel:—Held: (1) it was bad, because the rights of the vicar were not merely private but were accompanied by spiritual & other duties in which his parishioners were interested, & he could not therefore waive or divest himself of those rights & duties by the conduct imputed to him; (2) the claim was bad, inasmuch as it did not allege that the chapel was a chapel of ease, or otherwise show any right in the vicar to nominate and present a clerk to it.

(3) Defts. claiming relief over against the Ecclesiastical Comrs. served upon them a notice under R. S. C., Ord. 18, r. 18. They entered an appearance under r. 20, & an order was afterwards made at chambers, under r. 21, that they should be at liberty to appear & defend this action so far as related to the question whether all things required to be done by them, in order to enable them as against ptff. to make a valid declaration of the right of nomination & to vest that right in defts., were done by them, & that they should be bound by the finding upon that question. The ptff. then obtained an order on the Ecclesiastical Commissioners for discovery of documents:—Held: the third parties having appeared in the action to litigate with ptff., he was entitled to discovery from them, & the order for it was right.

The vicar of a parish as such, has only the right to present to a public consecrated chapel within his parish, when such chapel is a chapel of ease, though he has the right to forbid any person to officiate within his parish without his consent, unless he has been deprived of such right by some statute or some arrangement binding on the bishop of his diocese, the patron of the mother church, & the patron thereof.—MACALLISTER v. ROCHESTER (Bp.) (1880), 5 C. P. D. 194; 49 L. J. Q. B. 114, 443; 42 L. T. 22, 481; 28 W. R. 584, D. C.

396. —Consistent with those of parishioners.—The incumbent has only such rights as are consistent & co-equal with the rights of the parishioners (LORD COLERIDGE, C.J.).

No one can lawfully read a service over a corpse in a churchyard, & for this purpose the consecrated portion of a cemetery is the same thing as a churchyard, unless he is the incumbent or some clergyman duly authorised by him . . . speaking generally, no clergyman can perform sacred rites in the parish of another clergyman without the consent of the incumbent; to do so would be an ecclesiastical offence (LORD COLERIDGE, C.J.).

Consecration is effected by the decree of a competent ecclesiastical ct., that is to say, the act or sentence of consecration, signed by the bishops, setting aside the ground or building in sanctus usus (LORD COLERIDGE, C.J.).—WOOD v. HEADINGLEY-CUM-BURLEY BURIAL BOARD, [1892] 1 Q. B. 713; 66 L. T. 90; 56 J. P. 326; 40 W. R. 300; 8 T. L. R. 217; 36 Sol. Jo. 201, D. C.

403. The site.]—A grant by a rector to an individual of the exclusive right of burial for himself, his family, & friends, in a vault under the church, is a grant of an easement arising out of land & cannot be made by parol. No action will lie for the disturbance of such a right against a rector; if it would, case & not trespass would be the proper form. (1) Semble: a rector has no power to make such a grant, even by deed.
